President's Comment:

"One is always disturbed and shaken by the sudden realization of time's changes in something that one has known all his life". Thomas Wolf.

I read recently in a communications magazine that: "Perhaps all stories should begin with the word 'and'. Perhaps they should end with the word 'and' too. It would remind us that no experience ever begins; there was always something that preceded it. What really began, for us, was our awareness of something going on. At the end, the word 'and' . . . would remind us that no story ever really ends --- something more will happen after."

I paused to think of the multitude of ways in which this applies to Northeast Missouri State University. NMSU began on September 2, 1867, when Joseph Baldwin opened his North Missouri Normal School and Commercial College. And before that there was the Cumberland Academy which Baldwin's school succeeded. And before that Baldwin attended Bethany College in Bethany, West Virginia, where he first saw the need for trained teachers.

In this issue of the Nemoscope you will notice the article about the completion of President Emeritus Walter H. Ryle's history of the University's first 100 years. Already we have begun to collect material to be included in future histories of the University because even as the last page is printed, the heartbeat of the institution goes on.

Recently a most important chapter to future history volumes was written with the changing of Northeast's name to University. I view this name change one way as a recognition of the good things that have transpired here for many, many years . . . prior to my "awareness".

Now I think of the excellent start that students and faculty alike have had this first fall as a university. And of the creative ways the faculty are inspiring students to increase their awareness of life. And of the education NMSU will provide these young people. And of the impact that they will have on the world. And . . .

Northeast Missouri State University

by Robert L. McKinney

"What's in a name?" Shakespeare has Juliet ask. And then goes on to say "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." No doubt Shakespeare was right but to answer Juliet's question--identity is in a name. It often has been said that the sweetest sound in the world is one's own name. If this is true of individuals, it can be argued that it's true of groups of individuals and we all know that corporations spend huge sums of money to be properly identified. So what's in the name Northeast Missouri State University?

The long, long shadow of Joseph Baldwin is in it for sure. And so are the shadows of a long list of dedicated teachers, professors, and employees who made this institution into a vital force in the educational world. Certainly the thousands upon thousands of former students and graduates are involved. Then one might multiply that number by many fold when the number of students who have been taught by those who went to school here is contemplated. So literally millions of people are involved in the name. Some consciously and perhaps some unconsciously.

Let's look at the various names we have had and then view our University status. On Sept. 2, 1867, Joseph Baldwin opened the doors of his private enterprise which he named "North Missouri Normal School and Commercial College." On June 2, 1868, he filed articles of incorporation with the State of Missouri and listed the title as North Missouri Normal School. First District Normal School of Missouri was the name given by the legislature of Missouri on March 19, 1870, when the governor of the state signed the legislation. Then on May 20, 1919, legislation was signed into law renaming the normal schools teachers colleges. More recently, on Dec. 11, 1967, the Board of Regents under the authority of permissive legislation dropped the word "teachers" from the title and on Jan. 1, 1968, we became known to many as NMSC.

Our name changing process came to an apparent culmination when on Aug. 11, 1972, the Regents took action to rename us Northeast Missouri State University. The official announcement was made that evening at Summer Commencement Exercises. The action was made possible by legislation passed by the 76th General Assembly and signed into law by Gov. Warren E. Hearnes.

On Aug. 13, two days after the Regents took action, the legislation became law.

Now, our shift to University status is just another historic date in the development of this institution but the story behind the legislation and the process of its growth from idea to reality is an interesting sidebar. Governor Warren E. Hearnes signed the legislation in late April and James R. Reinhard, President of the Board of Regents and President Charles J. McClain were there to witness the ceremony. Shortly after that event, the Public School Retirement System Board of Trustees announced that in its opinion it could not accept contributions from state universities because the law under which they operate authorized them to accept monies from state colleges and state teachers colleges.

The legal technicalities involved caused the various attorneys for the state colleges to call several conference on the matter. Northeast's attorney, Clyde Burch, requested an Attorney General's opinion on the legality of the position taken by the retirement board.

In an opinion dated July 21, 1972, the Attorney General stated "It is, therefore, our opinion that the passage of Senate Bill No. 427 by the Second Regular Session of the 76th General Assembly does not exclude state teachers college teachers from membership in the Public School Retirement System of Missouri." Since the Board of Trustees of the retirement system had previously agreed that they would accept the opinion as a guide to their future actions, the way was cleared for the Regents to proceed with the name change.

Behind this chronicle of events lies another story on the efforts of many people to effect the passage of Senate Bill No. 427. Conferences in Jefferson City, letters to representatives, many coming from alumni, and many other actions were taken. It is perhaps folly to single out one individual to whom much credit should be given but Senator William J. Cason from the 31st District was in the forefront of the effort.

There was considerable discussion as to how we could shorten the name but the Regents wisely noted that the language of the legislation was specific and the alternative only one. So we are now Northeast Missouri State University. But this might not even be the culmination, perhaps sometime the word "state" can be dropped since it seems redundant or some other alternative may be taken. And then to many former students, NMSU will probably remain known as K.S.T.C. or M.S.T.C. even though those names never became a reality.

For you alumni too, at the September meeting the Board of Regents authorized the replacement of diplomas for any former graduate who wants one. There is a catch though, the service will cost ten dollars. If you are interested just contact the Office of the Dean of Instruction at the "University".

THE MOD SQUAD

by Thomas R. ShROUT, Jr.

More than 1,000 freshman students were sitting on the steps of the Student Union, the curb, in the street and on the retaining wall facing Marion Street. Many were "vibrating" with the rhythm of the rock band. It was the freshman orientation mixer.

To the side of the street dance, a youthful appearing man wearing wire-rimmed glasses dressed in a trim, tan, double-knit sport coat and gray slacks, turned to a pretty young blond and tall black man next to him: "Debby and Fontaine when chaperoning a dance," he explained, "what you have to do is fold your arms and look mean." He proceeded to go through dramatic charades of folding his arms and scowling which quickly turned into a smirk. The three of them laughed and resumed talking with new students, reassuring many about their first few days of college life.

The trio--the leader with the wire-rimmed glasses, the young pretty blond and the tall black man--have become known at NMSU as the "Mod Squad", after the television detective series. The leader is James R. Ritter, Dean of Student Affairs; the blond, Mrs. Deborah Stahly, Director of Student Activities; and the black, Fontaine C. Piper, Assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs.

All three are relatively new to the faculty, having come to NMSU during the fall of 1971. Ritter, the eldest of the group at 35, had been a popular figure at Hickman High School in Columbia for the past 12 years, serving first as a teacher, then director of guidance and most recently as associate principal.

In July 1971, he came to NMSU as Associate Dean of Student Affairs and then became Dean this past July when Henry M. Boucher retired.

Debby is 24 and a 1970 graduate of Southeast Missouri State University. She earned her masters in Library Science at the University of Missouri-Columbia and came to NMSU in September 1971 as director of student activities.

Fontaine is 28 and has returned to his alma mater after graduating in January 1970. He received his masters degree from Southern Illinois University. He has served in numerous capacities since his initial appointment in September 1971.

Together, they have been working to build a new image for the Division of Student Affairs.

Dean Ritter said: "I think our role is to serve as a type of administrative representative of the student body. There is a Dean of Instruction which represents the instructional divisions. There is a Dean of Administration that represents the administrative part of the campus. In my opinion the Dean of Student Affairs, as much as possible represents the viewpoint of the students and articulates this in administrative council meetings, to other administrators and faculty and to the president directly."

Dean Ritter sums his position up this way: "The Dean of Students should really be the student's dean."

Although the three do not work on every project together, each has wide ranging responsibilities within the division as opposed to a specific assignment. Perhaps the best example is Piper who although originally assigned as Dean Ritter's assistant, took over the duties of Director of Housing shortly after his arrival on campus last fall when that position was vacated. Fontaine responded again this past spring when he became head tennis coach after a resignation.

Although Mrs. Stahly is called Director of Student Activities, her responsibilities exceed what the title might imply. Since the dean of women position was eliminated by administrative reorganization, Debby has taken on many of those same responsibilities. She works with problems the women students have and is panhellenic adviser as well as handling many general disciplinary problems

The three are anxious to build an image for the division where students feel they can come and discuss problems and that once they have been heard, then something will be done if justifiable.

They have tried to accomplish this by making students feel extremely welcome when they come to discuss a problem which means often times giving a student precedence over other matters that come before them.

The newly renovated division offices in the Kirk Building makes most students feel welcome. The old Sociability Hall--or main concourse--in the Kirk Building had shown its age and had been transformed into a storage and receiving station for furniture and supplies. A few broken down couches and chairs served as waiting areas for students.

The atmosphere in the building had grown so "cold" that many students were actually intimidated from venturing into one of the divisional offices.

Now, the entire first floor is fully carpeted with a new lighting sysstudents so they can personally hear the students' complaints and concerns. Last spring Dean Ritter, Fontaine and Debby visited each dormitory during the course of a two-week period. They have also reworked the freshman orientation program, making it more concise and informative and adding a pig roast picnic for the new students, at the beginning of the fall semester.

Debby has planned a series of rap sessions called "Meet the Man". In these sessions an administrator or faculty member will converse with students on an informal basis in hopes that both will learn the problems of the other. Initial plans call for rap sessions with the Registrar, A. James Snider and the Director of Safety and Security, Colonel Leslie Greiner.

It was from similar sessions like these that the Mod Squad learned about some of the problems in the dormitories and set about to improve the living conditions in them.

"We wanted to warm up the dormitories to make them more than a place to just sleep and study," Jim said. This year small refrigerators are available for rental tem and wall covering that brings a fresh appearance to the 50-year-old structure while at the same time employing and emphasizing the pleasing aspects of the more traditional architecture and interior design.

The "Mod Squad" along with others in the division worked closely with architects in planning the refurbishment. But Dean Ritter, Debby and Fontaine realize that a pleasant atmosphere does not in itself increase communication with students.

They deliberately take time out each semester to have lunch in each of the cafeterias, eating with in the dorm rooms. Freshman women for the first time have the option--with parental consent--of not having dorm hours.

In addition a trial "open house" plan is going into effect this fall. The plan was developed last spring after considerable debate about the pros and cons by both students and faculty.

The trial plan was formulated after student groups met with Dean Ritter for days on end, studying various open house plans and presenting proposals that were unacceptable to first the students and then the administration. Finally, Ritter was able to develop the plan along with the help of some students, that was acceptable to both groups. This effort by the Mod Squad of listening to students has had its affect on the student body.

Fontaine has compared the attitude of the students now with what it was when he himself was a student here. "When I was leaving here, students were getting more restless . . . now students have an avenue where they are getting answers. We expect them to come to us and they are. They come to us and ask us questions and they are not content until they find an answer and we have not been content until we've brought them one."

"I think the students have been very appreciative of the steps that have been taken in student affairs to increase communication," Debby added. "They realize it is a definite benefit to them to have someone to be their spokesman and to be looking out for them."

One of the major difficulties in improving the image of the division has been that historically it has been directly involved with student discipline. Although this function is still delegated to the division, Dean Ritter emphasizes that this is only a small part of what the division does.

"Some students still think if you're going to see the Dean of Student Affairs, it must be because you're in trouble and are about to be put on probation or suspended. That's simply not the case," Jim said.

"Discipline is a very minor role that we play. The major role is to provide services and we can tick off the areas in the Division of Student Activities: the free play, financial aids, testing and counseling, the student health service, international advising services, the INDEX and the ECHO.

"The service aspect is foremost in our minds. We can point out specific services. We can't point out specifically the other things that we're trying to do such as making students feel that there is someone here who really cares and that they are fully devoted to serving the student," Ritter said.

This common purpose has led to a comradery among the Mod Squad despite their relatively diverse backgrounds. Dean Ritter was born in Polo, Oklahoma. His family lived for a short time in St. Joseph before moving to Brookfield where he was graduated from high school. He received both his undergraduate and graduate degrees from the University of Missouri - Columbia. He and his wife, Anne, have a four-year-old daughter, Julie.

Fontaine is the son of a New York City policeman. He grew up on Staten Island and after high school graduation, went to work for a New York City bank as an internal auditor. Then after spending three years in the navy, he decided to go to college and chose NMSU.

"I had a friend in New York--a teacher--who said Northeast Missouri State is a good school in physical education, so I decided to come here," Fontaine said. "I also applied at the University of Southern Connecticut, but decided on Northeast because they answered my application first and besides I hadn't ever been further west than Pennsylvania and I wanted to see what the Midwest was like," he added.

After graduation from Northeast, Fontaine had a teaching assistantship at Southern Illinois University. He received his masters there and returned to NMSU in September 1971.

He is the first black administrator at NMSU.

"I guess it's significant for the campus, but I figure if you're an administrator, you're an administrator and it doesn't matter if you're black or white."

In addition to his duties as Dean Ritter's assistant, coordinating the housing office and being tennis coach, Fontaine also taught 10 hours of physical education last year. This fall he gave up his teaching duties and a reorganization of personnel in the housing office has freed Fontaine from some of those responsibilities to devote more of his time to assisting Dean Ritter.

brary science major and this past summer taught two courses in the Library and Museums Division.

All three Mod Squad members are avid joggers, each tries to put in at least a mile a night. But Dean Ritter confesses: "When you're as tired as I am after that mile, I don't call that jogging, it's running."

Debby enjoys fishing and water sports. She has several cats and dogs. Fontaine and Dean Ritter both closely follow team sports especially the NMSU Bulldogs as each attends virtually every home game and many out-of-town games.

Although they do not assume the apparel of their television counterparts, their clothing is stylish and pleasing. In fact Debby gives Jim and Fontaine a rough time every so often when they both happen to come to work with blue blazers and gray slacks.

"The three of us can count on having at least one good laugh each day," Debby said. "We're all actors at heart and we're always pantomiming for each other things that have happened during the day."

The congenial working relationship has had a noticeable and positive affect on the students. Student body president Kem Cavanah feels the three have established an excellent rapport with the students.

That has been a primary objective of the Mod Squad, to increase the communication among administrators, faculty and students. Although the day-to-day events that transpire around our two heroes and heroine may not seem as exciting as the television Mod Squad, their objectives are similar, to achieve a better sense of communication between two generations which share 35 acres of common ground in a rural community in Northeast Missouri.

Fontaine will also continue this year as tennis coach. He and his wife Vera, also an NMSU graduate, have a son, Scott.

Before Debby moved to Columbia to work on her masters degree, she had lived her entire life in Cape Girardeau, graduating from high school there and from Southeast Missouri State University. She married her high school sweetheart, Randy, and he is a third year medical student at Kirksville College of Osteopathic Medicine. She is a li-

Lutz

Perhaps, if the right situation had arisen at the right time, Joe Lutz might be directing a college football eleven on a crisp autumn afternoon rather than basking in the summer sun holding down the first base coaching duties for the Cleveland Indians of the American Baseball League.

"Yes there was probably a time I might've considered football coaching as a permanent career," reflects the energetic coach and former Northeast Missouri State University graduate student. "But now, I'm preparing myself to manage on the major-league level, if that opportunity materializes."

At one time, however, the Keokuk, Iowa native was a head grid-iron mentor, even if for only the '64 season. That year he was interim coach at Parsons (Iowa) College, a few months after earning an M.A. degree from what was then called Northeast Missouri State Teachers College.

It was a successful year though. His Wildcat football team carved out a 6-3 ledger leading small colleges in pass offense. One of their victims was a pretty good Bulldog team that compiled a 7-2 mark and flew the MIAA pennant over Stokes Stadium. The high-powered "Kelly Green" attack stung the Purple and White that year 22-12.

Rollin Joseph Lutz, began his diversified career as a Keokuk High School youngster, competing in football, basketball and track. There was no baseball program in those days.

After graduation in 1943, Lutz served a three-year stint in the Marine Corps, followed by enrollment at Iowa Wesleyan College in Mt. Pleasant. He didn't really get involved in athletics at the Methodist school, because he soon signed a professional baseball contract with the St. Louis Browns as a first baseman.

Joe worked his way up the minor league ladder . . . first at Hannibal; then, Springfield, Ill.; Elmira, N.Y., and San Antonio, Tex. before reaching the parent team in 1951. During the following three seasons, he was at Montreal, St. Paul and Richmond, Va., all part of the old Brooklyn Dodger chain.

Two events took place during his professional baseball career that were to help shape his life. He married Doris Jane Kilbourne in 1948 and he received a B.A. degree with a major in physical education from Iowa Wesleyan in 1951.

"I met Jane at Wesleyan," Lutz recalls. "She was an outstanding student and athlete in high school and college. I'm fortunate to have someone so attractive, capable, intelligent and in full command of the situations surrounding our lives."

Lutz considers his wife a "patient, understanding mother, always dedicated to her responsibilities".

Joe and Jane have four sons—Rollin Joseph, Jr., a graduate of the University of Illinois; Richard Lawrence Lutz, a senior at the University of Iowa; Janine, 15; and Jorris, (J.J.), 7.

"Joe Jr. intends to pursue a career in physics and Larry plays football at Iowa where his interest is recreation," Lutz comments. "Jan, a high school freshman, would like to become a doctor. J. J. is starting the first grade, and his aspirations change daily."

Jane Lutz has taught the past three years at Sarasota where the family resides during the off-season. She is advisor to the student newspaper and has English classes under her supervision.

Joe hung up his glove as a professional player in 1960. "I was more than an adequate performer," he assesses.

After his retirement from baseball, he became player-manager of semi-professional clubs in the South Dakota Basin League. His teams at Mitchell, Watertown and Rapid City captured pennants.

Then, he began an Iowa High School coaching career that took him to Argyle, Mt. Pleasant, Lockridge and Davenport.

While at the latter school from 1959-61, Lutz was an assistant coach of a winning football squad and directed a state baseball championship edition and a runner-up team.

Parsons College appointed him as head baseball pilot in 1962. During the next three seasons, his squads collected 106 victories and dropped only 31 decisions.

He was also a pigskin assistant mentor at the Iowa college from 1962-63.

While at Parsons, Lutz decided to work on a Master's degree and selected "Northeast Missouri State Teachers College" because of the background of Dr. Joseph P. Dolan, head of the Division of Health and Physical Education.

"Dr. Dolan's knowledge and suggestions helped formulate my thoughts as a graduate student," he reminisces. "My fondest memories on the Kirksville campus were my relationships with instructors and competing against my wife in classes in which both of us were enrolled."

Mrs. Lutz received a Masters degree in city school administration from NMSU in 1964.

As a student under Dolan, Joe started preparing material for an eventual organizational training manual he authored for the Indians.

His success at Parsons caught the eye of the athletic department at Southern Illinois University (Carbondale). Lutz was tapped as assistant football coach and head baseball skipper in 1965.

The baseball Salukis chalked up two District 4 titles and finished second once in the next four years. But more important, SIU was runnerup in the 1968 College World Series.

Lutz was chosen as National Coach of the Year that season. He also received honors twice as District Coach of the Year.

Then three years ago he was hired by the Cleveland organization, first serving the Tribe as a minor league instructor and manager of the rookie teams in Sara-

by William H. Cable

sota, Fla., and director of the physical fitness program for the farm system.

In July 1971, Lutz was moved up to the parent club to "direct traffic" at first base and coordinate the physical fitness program. He also is director of audio-visual materials.

Joe expresses a sense of gratification in watching young people mature under his supervision. "It's indeed rewarding to work together for a championship where dedication, and sacrifice and self-discipline are key words," he maintains.

Numerous Lutz-guided college players have performed in professional baseball, and four have reached the majors. Those making it to the "Big-Time" include Jim Panther (Texas), Don Mason (San Diego), Jerry Reuss (Houston), and Rich Hacker (Montreal).

"I gain much satisfaction seeing one of my students achieve the chance to play in professional sports," he declares.

Has he enjoyed teaching athletics? "Yes, to me, athletics is a way of life," he replies. "If the proper foundation is started with the right type of athletic environment, a youngster can nurture success and experiences, both rewarding and gratifying. Personalities develop and mature into rich and fruitful lives."

Now, Joe Lutz is patiently preparing himself, in case that managerial opportunity comes knocking at his door.

Centennial History of the Northeast Missouri State Teachers College

by Carol Jean Speck

In the beginning was an ideal and an idealist. The two gave birth to an institution; today that institution is NMSU. But how many people remember the idealist, Joseph Baldwin, and the framework of his ideal? And how much history of NMSU might have been lost forever if the desire to preserve its history had not been set forth many years ago?

The idea to preserve the history of NMSU in written form was conceived 57 years ago in the fall of 1915. At that time E. M. Violette, history instructor at Northeast Missouri State Teachers College, made the remark to Walter Ryle "that the day is coming when the centennial history of this school should be written" and that it was not too early for someone to begin collecting material for it.

Now, 57 years later, in 1972, that idea has become a reality; Dr. Walter H. Ryle, President Emeritus of Northeast Missouri State University, has completed his book, The Centennial History of the Northeast Missouri State Teachers College.

Dr. Ryle said that Violette's statement "did not impress me very much at the time, but the more I thought about it, the more I became interested. I have spent many years in collecting and organizing material relating to the history of this institution with the view that someday I might write its centennial history."

"I was greatly pleased and I felt honored that the Board of Regents commissioned me to write the centennial history in January, 1967 while the College was in the early phases of a centennial celebration. I went to work in earnest in March, 1967, and I've worked continuously on it until about March, 1972."

Dr. Ryle said his first task in making the book a reality was "to locate the material from which I could gain the facts that I needed in writing a history. I knew many of the sources, but in examining these sources I found other sources; one source led to another."

The President Emeritus continued: "My published bibliography will contain about 175 to 200 sources I investigated. Some of these sources are manuscripts, printed and unprinted sources, college publications, newspapers, magazines, state documents and secondary materials. Among the manuscripts I had the papers of Presidents Joseph Baldwin, William D. Dobson, Joseph P. Blanton, William P. Nason, Dr. Eugene Fair, the collection of Dr. Walter H. Ryle and the papers of Dr. John R. Kirk." In order to give a more concrete idea of the material he researched, Dr. Ryle said that his collection alone fills 25 drawers of steel filing cabinets.

Dr. Ryle also said he used the papers of Glenn Frank, graduate of NMSU and former President of the University of Wisconsin; James M. Greenwood, a member of Baldwin's first faculty; C. H. McClure, a member of the faculty at one time; the collection of Gen. John J. Pershing; and the papers of E. M. Violette, long-time history teacher of the campus.

Finding his sources in varied places, the historian visited the school archives, the Missouri Historical Society at Columbia, and used the records of the Missouri State Teachers Association, the newspaper files deposited in Pickler Memorial Library and "a voluminous amount of material that I had personally collected over a period of more than half a century."

In completing the research Dr. Ryle said he used as many different methods of taking notes "as circumstances arose." He said that often he did research work to check on material he believed to be true. "I've lived with this thing many years. I taught history here for 10 years; I was president 30 years at the school. I learned a lot, but things become a little hazy. In other words, I wanted to recheck some material to see if my memory was accurate."

In transferring the material to written form and a preliminary draft, Dr. Ryle used two methods: "Some of it I wrote longhand and other parts I dictated to a secretary. . . . Sometimes I would rewrite a chapter two or three times to make the copy more reliable, to reduce the length of the material or to include additional information."

The book, The Centennial History of the Northeast Missouri State Teachers College, is divided into two parts. The author said he entitled Part I "The Birth of an Idea, Its Establishment and Neglect" to describe the time span from 1867 through 1899.

"This is the period of time in which Joseph Baldwin laid down his basic purpose of establishing a Normal School -- to train teachers for the public school in the state of Missouri; and then in the closing days of the 19th century there was neglect -- in other words, the school neglected the basic purpose."

"This school was the first state institution devoted primarily to the preparation of teachers. The pattern of teacher education institutions was cut right here on this campus by Baldwin and those who followed -- Nason, Blanton and Dobson."

Dr. Ryle listed chapters contained in Part I as the following: "The Introduction"; "Free Public School Sentiment in Missouri"; "Campaign in Missouri for the Free Public Schools"; "The Cumberland Academy", which was located at Memorial Park in Kirksville and which closed its doors as the Civil War began; "North Missouri Normal School"; "The Establishment of the First State Normal School of Missouri"; "The Early Days"; and "The Neglect of Standards and Ideals".

Part II of the book is called "The Restoration of the Ideal, Its Growth and Expansion" and deals with 1899 through 1967. The second division begins the time span broken down into presidential administrations: "The Restoration of Standards and Ideals", encompassing the Kirk administration; "Transition and Retrenchment", pertaining to the Fair administration; and "The Teachers College Comes of Age", which centers around the Ryle administration.

Chapters in Part II that follow include "The Board of Regents", "The Alumni", "The Laboratory School", "History of the Library", "The Campus and Buildings", "Publications", "The Growth of the College" (which includes the student enrollments, workshops and financial situation of the school), "History of Commencements", "The Violette Museum", "Music" and "Athletics".

Dr. Ryle said he believed a chapter entitled "The History of Student Organizations" might be of particular interest to students. It includes a catalog of present and past student organizations as well as history of any organization that existed for any length of time. The historian said that he discovered approximately 150 organizations for which nothing but the names have survived.

Another chapter in Part II, "The Emblems, Awards and Other Items Related to College Life", deals with the historical background of the flag, school song, college stamp, letter "K", official college blanket, emblem, school yell and hickory stick.

"Last (in Part II) is the crown on the whole book -- and that's the Centennial Year," said the President Emeritus.

Dr. Ryle said that the amount of research available varied for different topics. He said that the chapter on the Cumberland Academy called for less research than most of the other chapters because "I had formerly studied about that old Academy building, and the sources were very limited. It didn't take me long to do the research work for that." The author said he had made speeches on Baldwin coming to Kirksville and had done research for it over a period of years.

"The part that I had to do the greatest amount of new research on was the biggest portion of Part II. There are a lot of things that I knew but I didn't think I knew well enough to put down in black and white. I had talked and given speeches to the faculty over Part I until I had a lot of those chapters nearly worked out."

"And then I would write out a chapter, for instance, knowing that I was probably going to find something more. If I wrote the material out using what I knew, then when I found additional information I could more easily fit it into what I'd already written." Dr. Ryle said when an individual writes a book this way he takes months to get chapters into final form. "You write a lot of chapters tentatively, knowing you're going to do a lot of changing and adding. I don't think there are any sources concerning this school that I hadn't seen or examined," Dr. Ryle continued. "I don't think anyone's going to find much more about the history of this school than that which I've found out. Somebody may come along and write it in a more interesting way, but I think my book will have the facts in it."

Dr. Ryle estimated that the number of pages in the book will be between 550 and 600 after it is printed. "And there will be between 60 and 65 pictures in the book. . . . The first picture in the book is the old Cumberland Academy -- that's where the school opened its doors on Sept. 2, 1867. The last picture in the book will be lighting the flame to the second century, on Sept. 2, 1967 -- that closed the first century."

According to Dr. Ryle, the book is now in the hands of the printer, Comfort Printing Co. in St. Louis. Wayne Davenport, Director of Publications at NMSU, said that the book will probably be ready for distribution about the beginning of January, 1973.

"The book will be bound in cloth with a purple back," said Dr. Ryle. "Right at the beginning of the book -- in front of the title page -- will be the school flag in color."

It seems appropriate that Dr. Ryle would spend five years of his life in writing a history about the institution to which he devoted his life.

On Sept. 9, 1913 Walter Ryle entered Northeast Missouri State Teachers College as a student and graduated in the summer of 1916 with a B.S. degree in history. Between 1916 and 1919 Ryle taught school in Clifton Hills in Randolph County and attended other institutions of higher learning. Upon returning from World War I in 1919, he re-entered school here. Following that time he became principal of Palmyra High School and became superintendent of schools in Holden for seven years.

"And then I came to this institution on the faculty as a teacher of history in 1928, and I've been here ever since. I became President in 1937 and President Emeritus in 1967.

Looking back on his own administration, Dr. Ryle recalled an extensive growth of the institution, from 850 students in 1937 to about 5,000 in 1967. Growth included expansion of capital improvements and influence and prestige of the school as a teacher education institution. "Its product was known and sought among public school people throughout the nation."

According to the President Emeritus, Northeast was one of the first teacher education institutions in the nation to institute a program of general education. "In 1947 we started graduate work leading to the M.A. degree in the preparation of teachers; curriculum offerings were expanded as the times demanded; and the faculty grew from about 50 to about 175 or 180 faculty members."

"No one individual does it. The demand of the time is the stimulus. I had a great faculty that was dedicated to the program of the College along with a dedicated Board of Regents. All things were accomplished through the team play of these forces. I was just one of the instruments."

Dr. Ryle said he felt it was his duty to the institution to write its centennial history "because I lived through 54 of the first 100 years of the College." He said he had known Kirk, who became president in 1899, and had "seen and heard every president of this school talk with the exception of four, and one of them served only one year. I've been connected with the school and have kept in constant contact with it. I became acquainted with a number of the outstanding graduates of this institution in the 1880s and 1890s. I just felt it was my business because I had the background. . . . It wasn't to my credit that I had it; it was just by chance. It's nothing to brag about; I was just thrown into the atmosphere."

The Centennial History of the Northeast Missouri State Teachers College was not Dr. Ryle's first book. The author has written four other books, the first of which was his doctoral dissertation, written in 1930 and entitled Missouri: Union or Secession. "It dealt with the problem of why didn't Missouri secede with the other slave-holding states instead of remaining in the Union."

Another book that the President Emeritus has written is a history of Missouri entitled Story of Missouri; it was used in the public schools as a text but is now out of print. The historian also has written The Centennial History of the First Baptist Church as related to that church in Kirksville; the book was completed while Dr. Ryle worked on his centennial history.

"My most scholarly book was Missouri: Union or Secession," the author said. Although his centennial history was as thoroughly researched, Dr. Ryle believes that the "interest is not as broad."

Familiar with the process of writing other books, Dr. Ryle said he knew the book about the centennial history would be an extensive undertaking. "I didn't kid myself about that at all. But I love to do this kind of work. I could spend my lifetime doing this, and I've been very happy in it. The two happiest things I've done in my lifetime have been teaching American history and writing history."

When the book dealing with the centennial history was written, Dr. Ryle said he "just pounced into another job. What I'm doing now is compiling the source history of the centennial celebration. This will be a book of some size but not for the purpose of publishing. There will be mimeographed copies of it bound for historic purposes." The historian said that the book he is working on now will constitute such things as speeches made during the centennial year, official records kept by various committees and important pictures.

"It's just for future historians. If the material is not preserved today, a lot of it will be gone. And I found the importance of this more than ever when I started writing the centennial history; I found gaps in the history of this institution where the records had been lost. I'm now preserving the records of the first centennial celebration; whoever writes the history of the second centennial celebration will, naturally, want to go back and look to see what was done in the first. That individual is yet to be born."

The book on the centennial history may be completed, but Dr. Ryle's records keep accumulating. "I keep records all the time — about anything that has to do with the history of the school. Someday I intend to turn this material over to the archives of the College."

In addition to the writing that Dr. Ryle does, he is in charge of landscaping and beautification of NMSU. Therefore, the time that he can spend writing each day varies. "I've worked in my office from 8 in the morning to 6 at night on some occasions; other days I just put in a few hours."

Dr. Ryle said he is "steeped in the philosophy of the institution" and wants to preserve its history because he wants people to remember "that this is not just another college. This institution was a pioneer in the field of teacher education even before teacher education was an important item in the educational scheme of America."

"There's another thing about this school that a lot of people don't realize. This school, from the very beginning, was a four-year teacher institution. And Baldwin organized his school on a four-year basis, giving a four-year degree. True, it was called a Normal School in those days, but the old New England Normal School was about a two-year course, dealing largely with educational courses." According to Dr. Ryle, the institution in Kirksville was one of the first to use an apprenticeship or internship program called practice teaching.

Now, the book has been written. Long ago the idealist and his ideal were united to form an institution that has survived through the completion of Dr. Ryle's book, The Centennial History of the Northeast Missouri State Teachers College. The author and historian, looking back on the last five years, can now say with satisfaction what the idealist, Baldwin, probably thought many years ago: "It was a long, difficult but a thoroughly thrilling task on my part. I've enjoyed every moment of it."

Nursing Program Starts Under New Curriculum

Students at NMSU pursuing a career in nursing will study under an entirely new curriculum this year. The new curriculum is the result of the revitalization of the Nursing Program after it was phased out in 1968 because, in part, of the inability to find qualified persons to fill teaching vacancies.

But, after the expression of great concern on the part of the faculty, the students and residents of the northeast Missouri area, the Board of Regents moved to revitalize the program. The Board appointed a task force to study Nursing at the University and to suggest ways to renew the program.

The task force recommended that Nursing become a separate division after formerly being a part of the Health and Physical Education Division. This was done and in July, 1971, a staff of three instructors, two clinical assistants and a division head was hired.

Dr. Grace Devitt, Nursing Division Head, and her five staff members have developed a Nursing curriculum over the last year which they hope is meaningful and lasting.

The Division has set up a three-pronged program. The first prong is the traditional role of care for the sick. In the second and third prongs, the students learn and practice health maintenance and prevention of disease. No longer does the patient have to be in the hospital for nursing care. He may receive care in his home or in a nursing home.

Dr. Devitt said the new program is to be community centered-treatment of the individual as a whole in a specific environment whereas the old program was "system centered", a program that fragmented the body into systems, thus fragmenting the person.

The new program will stress the treatment of the person as a whole living body thus opening many new vocational jobs for nurses other than just hospital work.

The program is constructed so all nursing theory will be taught on campus. The instructing nurses will be a team-teaching situation giving supervision and assistance in all labs. Learning will take place in sequential order with theory being applied in actual practice. Student nurses will be evaluated daily by their instructors.

Since the program is based on the community and not the hospital, the students will have their labs in the nursing homes and private homes along with the working in the three Kirksville hospitals and the Diagnostic Clinic.

The study indicates "that most high school students want a meaningful role in the major decisions which affect them in school and that they want to work with the employed personnel." Findings from their two-year cooperative curriculum study of the programs in 76 elementary and secondary schools in northwest Indiana also conclude "that 66 percent of high school pupils would like to have either complete control of their learning activities or have equal control with others." Conducted for the Northwest Indiana School Study Council, this cooperative study differed from the many studies done by the professors for it involved 200 teachers and administrators in training and data collecting. Following the collection and compiling of the data, the information was given to the Ball State consultants who determined how effectively the schools were meeting the needs of the students. Drs. Kunkel and McElhinney have evaluated programs in over 50 school systems in Indiana, Ohio, Illinois and Alaska in the past eight years. "In our curriculum evaluations we are looking at the total impact of the school on the pupils rather than evaluating any one skill", they explained. New Program Develops In Foods Management

The first post high school certificate program in food management, production and service in the northeast Missouri area has been developed by NMSU. The program began with the fall semester.

Certificates will be awarded with the completion of a two-year or one-year program. Each program is planned to qualify the student by learning through work experiences and classroom study for the wide variety of employment that is related to institutional and commercial food services.

Students will be prepared for many career opportunities such as cook-manager, production manager, dietary supervisor, buyer, caterer and many others. The chances for employment should be unlimited, as there are many hospitals and numerous nursing homes with each employing several persons in food services, not to mention the school lunch programs at most schools.

The introductory classes on food principles and nutrition will be taught on the NMSU campus, while the quantity cookery and other practicum classes will use the food facilities of the student union and dormitory dining rooms.

The Vocational Division of the State Department of Education has given its endorsement of the plan as one of its approved career programs.

Mary Lou Smith of the home economics division is the Director of the program. Miss Smith obtained her B.S. in Foods and Nutrition and her Master's Degree in Food Science from Kansas State University. She also has seven years of experience as a registered dietitian.

Jones Concentrating On Speed for Spring, '74 Olympics Are Long Way Off

Cross-Country Squad Performs Beyond Earlier Expectations

Editor's Note:

Since the writing of this story Larry Jones has undergone surgery for a knee injury and will be out of action for the entire football season. Jones should experience complete recovery according to his doctors. RHH

Larry Jones isn't the type of athlete to put long range aspirations ahead of his immediate goals.

So it should come as no surprise he's not thinking ahead four years to the 1976 Olympic Games.

"No, I'll concentrate on improving my speed next spring, and maybe I'll have a good shot at some world track records," declares the Northeast Missouri State University speedster. "The next Olympics are a long way off. I wouldn't want to build up my hopes too high pointing for them."

Jones, first Bulldog athlete to ever vie for a berth on an Olympic roster, advanced in July to the semi-finals of the 400 meter trials in Eugene, Ore. before he was eliminated from further competition.

Now he reminisced a bit about his recent adventures, as he swapped his track shoes for football cleats.

The swift Lemoore, California thinclothed was not depressed about overall accomplishments in his first campaign at NMSU after transferring from Fresno (Calif.) State. After all, he logged some outstanding achievements, particularly on the national level.

Kenneth Gardner wasn't building up his hopes too high in September as he viewed his 1972 cross-country team.

The squad was composed of one junior and nine freshmen, and he felt the group was at least a year away from a banner season. Gardner's young "eager-beavers" split their two curtain-raisers—upending Lincoln University, 17-42, but then dropping a 23-37 decision to powerful Augustana (Ill.). Both races were four miles.

Junior Linley Lipper (Kahoka) established a new Kirksville Country Club course mark of 20:53 against Lincoln, shattering his own record of

In March, for instance, Jones won the NCAA University Division Indoor 440-yard dash, an electrifying victory in which he overhauled Nebraska's Garth Case at the finish line. He became the first NMSU trackman to earn a gold medal at a major college indoor encounter.

Then, he captured the NCAA College Division Outdoor 400 meters in May, establishing a new meet mark of :45.8. This achievement was followed a week later by a second-place effort in the University Division Outdoor 400. He charted a :45.1, his best reading for that distance.

What made Jones exceedingly unhappy was the lingering after-thought he should've been able to qualify for the trial finals at Eugene.

"I was among the front three men when we rounded the last turn," he recalls, "At that point, I sort of tightened up and lost my fluid motion, but I didn't lack endurance."

Jones says he finished about seventh in the 12-man pack with time of :45.7.

Between the University Division spectacle and the Olympic trials, he followed a training schedule. However, Larry also had a job, and could only go to the track after work. He still found time to enter two 440-yard races, finishing first in the Rose Festival and third in the Kennedy Games while running for the Bay Area Striders.

21:06. He topped that time a week later at Augustana by registering 20:48, but the reading was only good enough for a second-place finish.

Yearling Ron Harmon (Berkeley) was impressive in his initial collegiate performances. He was clocked at 21:08 and 21:01. Other plebes competing in the first two meets were: Otto Schnarr (St. Louis Parkway West), 21:26 and 21:51; Greg Clausen (Moline, Ill.), 22:01 and 21:31; Joe Haake (St. Louis Riverview Gardens), 22:31 and 21:53; and Jay Skinner (Ft. Madison, Ia.), 22:36 and 22:12.

His coach, Ken Gardner, doesn't share Jones' unhappy reaction to his performance in the semi-finals of the trials.

"Our track supporters would've been extremely proud of him that day," Gardner maintains. "He did a superb job . . . just lacked the experience of other dashmen in the strong field. People have to remember these other great runners were already out of school and at least two years older than Larry."

Gardner added that the 10 best American quarter-milers, including Larry, of course, might be good enough to win some type of medal at the Olympics.

Indeed, Jones was in some "fast company" at Eugene. He was stacked up against the likes of Lee Evans, the 1968 Olympic gold medal recipient, Vince Matthews, another 400 meter participant four years ago, John Smith, gold medalist for the 400 at the 1972 University Division Meet, and Wayne Collett, first in the finals at the trials.

A field of 32 hopefuls was listed when the first round of the trials began, and this foursome, picked to represent the U. S. at Munich, survived the rugged four-round grind.

Smith was one of Jones' victims during his California High School career. As a prepster, Larry won the 440-yard dash three years ago at the California Golden West encounter and the California State Meet. His clocking in the latter outing was :46.6., the fastest high school and junior college time in the nation that year.

Gardner also stresses other points about his protege. For instance, Jones in 1972 completed only his first inter-collegiate track campaign and he had to sit out a season because of the transfer rule.

Another factor working to Larry's disadvantage was the cold, Midwestern climate. Most of the classy quarter-milers at the trials train in warm temperatures, according to the mentor.

"I was pretty well satisfied finding out this spring I could still run a good quarter after the layoff," Jones comments. "Nevertheless, when one reaches for the top and doesn't succeed I think he should be disappointed."

Jones isn't concerned the Bulldogs don't have a legitimate indoor track. NMSU performers can practice inside on a macadam-type oval, but it measures only about one twelfth of a mile.

"Last winter, I jogged five or six miles outside each day to build up my endurance and strength," he relates. "This really helped me. Perhaps, though, I sacrificed improving my speed in the process."

In looking ahead to his training schedule next year, he says he will concentrate a lot on the shorter dashes to better his speed.

But now his mind is on football. He is a wingback on the defending champions, and helped the Purple and White nail down the University's 21st league title in 1971. Jones' work last fall earned him honorable mention recognition on the MIAA All-Conference list.

Larry was inserted at the start of last season as a wide receiver. But he was moved to the backfield in October when the regular slotback was sidelined with a knee injury for the remainder of the campaign.

"I prefer playing end to slotback or wingback," he exclaims. "There's quite a bit involved in coming out of the backfield."

He says his biggest thrill on the football sod would have to be a stunning 100-yard kickoff return for a touchdown against Southeast Missouri State last year. The run-back was probably the turning point in the crucial conference contest, won by the Bulldogs, 24-21, on the road.

Jones, who enjoys both physical education and industrial arts, has no present ambitions for professional football.

"I really don't think I'd want to make the sport a long-range career," he declares.

But as Larry Jones always says, he doesn't like to look ahead too far in pursuing goals.

Early Victories Build Hopes for Another Conference Win

Two early season football victories pushed NMSU's string of constructive triumphs to nine before the home opener on Sept. 23 with Harding (Ark.) College.

The Bulldogs, under the tutelage of a new mentor, Randy Lukehart, shut out Missouri Western, 27-0, and Central Methodist, 42-0, on the road in their 1972 inaugurals.

NMSU's "Little Purple People Eaters" employed a stubborn defense, allowing their foes a mere 17.5 yards per game on the ground and only a 75-yard average via the airways.

Tackle charts indicated All-American junior linebacker Craig O'Sadnick

(West Brooklyn, Ill.) had plummeted 12 opponents. The other starting linebacker, sophomore Harold Jameson (Madison, Ill.), was the interception leader with three, and sophomore "nose guard" Warren Whitis (Cincinnati, O.) had the same number of fumble recoveries to top that department.

Lukehart's offense had not jelled yet, according to the mentor, but that fact didn't really surprise him. He had little time after his appointment in the spring to perfect a newly installed "Wing-T" attack.

Senior running back Lenvil Elliott (Richmond), last year's rushing ace, appeared to be taking up where he left off in 1971. His statistics showed 228 yards on 35 carries. Junior Wingback Marv Robinson (Monroe City) had gained 86 yards in 16 tries. NMSU's ground arsenal had pounded out 212 yards per clip.

The Bulldog pilot had used two quarterbacks in the two outings. Senior Geoff Engen (Wichita, Kan.) was erratic, so freshman Tom Williamson (Unionville) was given an opportunity to show what he could do at the controls. Although both signal callers had been inconsistent—only 19 completions out of 53 attempts—they had combined averaging 144.5 yds. per tilt.
