Education: the foundation of a democracy

It may be true that all good things must come to an end, but the realization of that axiom is not always easy either to contemplate nor to effect. Yet, after 32 years in public education, I must bring that service to a close.

I am fortunate that the 32 years have been good years, surrounded by wonderful colleagues who have been and are both professional and personal friends. I am as strongly committed to public education today as I was the day I first started teaching in 1948. For public education is without peer the essential foundation of American democratic society, in and through which more young people have been better educated than anywhere else in history.

I am doubly fortunate that I have been offered the challenge of a new career. On July 1, 1982, I will begin work as Temple Educator for Temple Emanu-El in San Jose, Calif.

For a year, at least, my family and I will remain in Walnut Creek at 1328 Arkell Road. The phone is still (415) 939-0708. My new working address will be Temple Emanu-El, 1010 University Ave., San Jose, CA 95126, and my phone (408) 292-0939.

'28 music grad still singing

I was Anne Norris when I attended college, but in 1935 I married Rev. James O. Michael, a Disciple of Christ minister, and we have had pastorates in Springfield, Mo., and Oklahoma. We are now retired but do interim ministries—have done 13. Now we are in Chanute, Kan., but my permanent address is Deer Creek, OK 74636.

We have had four children; two were in the Peace Corps.

I was a music major and am appreciative of my college work. I still sing and lead music for our church.

Extraordinary persistence pays off

I first met Rose Smith ('72) during my third year of teaching when I had a role in the Community Theater production she was directing. It was then that I became acquainted with the many facets of this woman I had heard so much about. Just when I had decided that she was a slave driver, I saw another side of her: her undaunted sense of humor emerged, and I realized that the slave driving was simply to assure that the cast members gave the best they were capable of giving.

Impressions change over the years, but even today (nine years later) I see Rose as a concerned, involved woman who still demands the best from her students.

Rose is always busy—with her family, her church and her students, but she is never too busy to lend an ear or take on another community project. When I took a maternity leave, it was Rose who most often thought of me—calling, writing notes, stopping by.

To pursue higher education at any age is commendable; I received my master's at age 24—not without some degree of persistence. Rose's persistence, however, is quite extraordinary. Despite financial difficulties, travel and various other obstacles, Rose has remained determined to get her degree. She will be as fine an example from Northeast as she is from Walnut Community Grade School.

One of 'Baltimore's Best'

As members of the Archeological Society of Maryland, we are in the process of winding up a seven-year dig in the basement of the oldest house in Baltimore, the Robert Long House in Fells Point, built in 1765 and in the process of being restored by the Preservation Society of Fells Point and Federal Hill.

I'm proud to have been among the first 500 citizens honored as "Baltimore's Best" several years ago and will shortly attend another such ceremony when the Baltimore Branch of the Needlework Guild of America will be given Baltimore's Best's highest award for contributing new articles of clothing and household linens to the needy for 90 years. I have sewed close to 400 articles a year for the past 10 years for this organization and have served that long as the distribution chairman, too.

In addition, I spend one day a week at the Maryland Science Center, mostly working in the Science Store where we enjoy as many as 1,300 school children a day. Identifying and packaging the fossils and shells given to the store for sale keeps my days full, believe me.

With each of our four children living in a different state, we also keep up a lively correspondence and have many opportunities to travel; so far, getting old hasn't worried us too much.

I really enjoy receiving the NEMOSCOPE, and I will be forever grateful for the fine education I received while attending Northeast.

90-year-old grad captures Homecoming spirit

I received the Homecoming schedule of events for 1982 and see many interesting things planned for right now. I am not physically able to come back for any events but am happy to see what is planned.

I am enclosing a check for $5; I see that that is the alumni fee if one is over 65. I had my 90th birthday this summer, so I should qualify.

I live in the Nebraska P.E.O. Home, which is a lovely retirement home. It is situated near churches, schools, library, post office and business district, which makes it good for older people.

My best wishes to you in all of your endeavors.

NMSU prepares student for future challenges

Time is neither fast nor slow, but constant. And so it is with change. We are angry at times because we cannot halt life just where we like it. Yet at other times, we are thankful that there are chances to start life over.

Time has been four years and two summers for me at NMSU. My senior year is coming to its end, and I find I am again a freshman, and again I will attempt to narrow the mass of knowledge which lies waiting for me to learn.

I feel sad and a little scared to be leaving because I am comfortable here. But we are forever embarking on journeys into new dimensions of our lives, and even though facing this change will not be without complications, I am excited and anxious to begin.

I made the right decision by coming to Northeast. I have always felt at home here. This institution through its fine personnel has taught me more than I knew I could learn about people, life and myself, in addition to preparing me for my future by teaching me practical information regarding my major.

You have prepared me for the challenges that lie ahead. I am thankful for the future because it offers the opportunity to put my knowledge to work. If I am successful for any one reason it is because you have instilled confidence in me because you believe... in the future... and in me. Thank you.

Loyal Alumni Office employee

Margaret Easley retires after 22 years

Homecoming marked a significant event in the Alumni Office this year that went unnoticed by those of you who were here for the weekend. Margaret Easley retired after 22 years in the office.

Margaret came to work at NMSU in the Alumni Office when Russ Harrison was the director. For those of you who did not know, Russ is Margaret's son-in-law.

Margaret enjoys telling the story about Russ going in to see Dr. Ryle about employing his mother-in-law as the keeper of the alumni files.

Dr. Ryle heard Russ's proposal out, thought for a moment, and reportedly said, "Well, Russ, if you think you can stand having your mother-in-law around, it's OK with me."

So began Margaret's career in alumni work. During her 22 years, she saw the number of records increase threefold, the introduction of the computer into recordkeeping and the advent of an organized fund-raising effort.

Through it all she has met hundreds of alumni, seeing them perhaps first as Work-Study or institutional students in the Alumni Office, then later as graduates with important jobs and members of the Alumni Association.

Margaret knows you better than you know her. We delight in asking her alumni trivia questions.

"Margaret, what year did old Joe graduate and where is he now?" More often than not, the answer (without looking in the files) was, "Why, he's working for so and so since he left the other company. His niece is enrolled now after transferring here a year ago. Joe's sister graduated a year after Joe but has a new name since getting divorced five years ago."

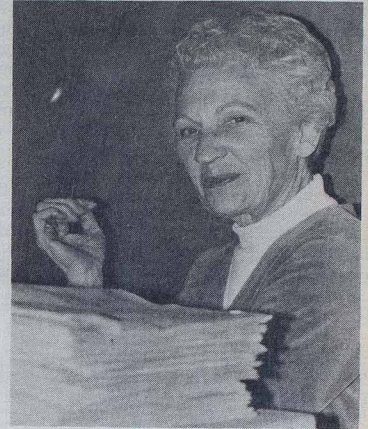

Her amount of knowledge is phenomenal. She kept track of you and knew your addresses probably before some of your relatives did. She suggested Homecoming guests and graduation speakers. She helped a number of alumni get back in touch over the years.

She wrote all the notes for the NEMOSCOPE, which are unprecedented in any other college or university alumni newspapers or magazines I've seen. She greeted you at Homecoming and alumni receptions. She is so indefatigable that she would stay until the last hurrah at a pre-Homecoming reception and greet the first early risers for morning coffee.

She is a great human being and is loyal to NMSU. We have been blessed with her service and that of her sidekick of 15 years, Helen Bailey. We'll miss Margaret and wish her the best during her retirement years.

AROUND THE QUAD

WADE ESTATE

William Trice, former county administrator in Columbia, recently pleaded guilty to mishandling the estate of the late Nan Wade, professor emeritus of modern languages. The estate was put under Trice's control after Miss Wade entered a nursing home and was unable to look after her own financial matters. Trice stole more than $75,000 from the estate for his own purposes.

FROM NMSU TO FORD

Linder Miller ('70) was the 1982 Summer Commencement speaker. She is now a production superintendent with the Ford Motor Company Engine Plant in Dearborn, Mich.

Miller told the graduates, "(After attending graduate school) I discovered how lucky I was to have attended a small school (NMSU) where the camaraderie is very prevalent, and yet the quality of education remains high."

CULTURE EXCHANGE

Here is an account in a Tokyo, Japan, paper about the exchange program between students from Hosei University and NMSU this summer. The NMSU students received an eight-week intensive course in the Japanese language before spending 3 1/2 weeks at Hosei. The cost of the program is about $2,000. Alumni wishing to participate in the 1983 exchange should contact the Alumni Office for further details.

MALL DELAYED

The sagging economy has put a damper, at least for a while, on a 56-store shopping mall proposed for Kirksville by a Dallas developing company. The company has dropped its option on land located near the Country Club on the south edge of town, where the proposed mall was to have been built.

NEW REC CENTER

Across town, the Kirksville College of Osteopathic Medicine has dedicated the Thompson Campus Center. The Center includes meeting rooms, racquetball courts, a sauna, a gymnasium, a whirlpool and a sun room.

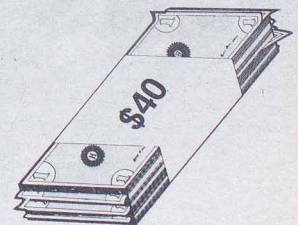

COVER GIRL

NMSU has started a new publication, CAMPUS magazine, which goes to students interested in attending NMSU. The magazine covers everything from academic topics such as new majors and computer career options to some of the more mundane concerns of college freshmen like "What do I wear?" and "Will it be easy to make friends?" Send us the name of someone whom you think might be interested in reading CAMPUS.

CBS REPORTS

NMSU political science students took part in the CBS Network November election coverage.

Two students did exit interviews of 30 voters each as they left their polling places at Novinger and the Old High School at Kirksville. The results were then fed to the CBS affiliate in St. Louis, KMOX, for tabulation and evaluation.

TUITION SURCHARGE

Students will be paying a $40 surcharge during the spring semester after Gov. Christopher Bond announced that appropriations approved in April for colleges and universities would be cut 5 percent. An initial 3 percent was "withheld" during the semester, with the announcement of an additional 2 percent coming in October. The Board of Regents was called into emergency session between the class reunion brunches and the Homecoming football game on Oct. 9 to approve the changes.

Greek Life

NMSU chapters win awards

Several NMSU chapters have received awards or nominations in recent months from their national Greek organizations. Two fraternities, Phi Kappa Theta and Alpha Kappa Lambda, were both named top chapters of their respective groups. Sigma Sigma Sigma won its national education award. Sigma Tau Gamma is also once again in the running for top chapter and a recent graduate, Rob Shults, was a finalist for Sig Tau "Man of the Year."

Sig Tau ground-breaking held

Homecoming saw ground-breaking ceremonies for a new Sig Tau house to be built on property already owned by the fraternity near the location of the current house. Final plans for the new structure have not yet been set.

IFC encouraging better grades

In an effort to improve fraternity grades, the Interfraternity Council has instituted a policy whereby rewards and punishments will encourage academic improvement. If a fraternity falls more than .1 grade point level below its mean GPA for two semesters, it will be unable to take any first-semester freshmen in its next pledge class. However, if it is above the mean GPA by .1 for those two semesters, the fraternity is eligible for scholarship money. The plan will actually go into effect for the first time this spring.

Greeks take even more pledges

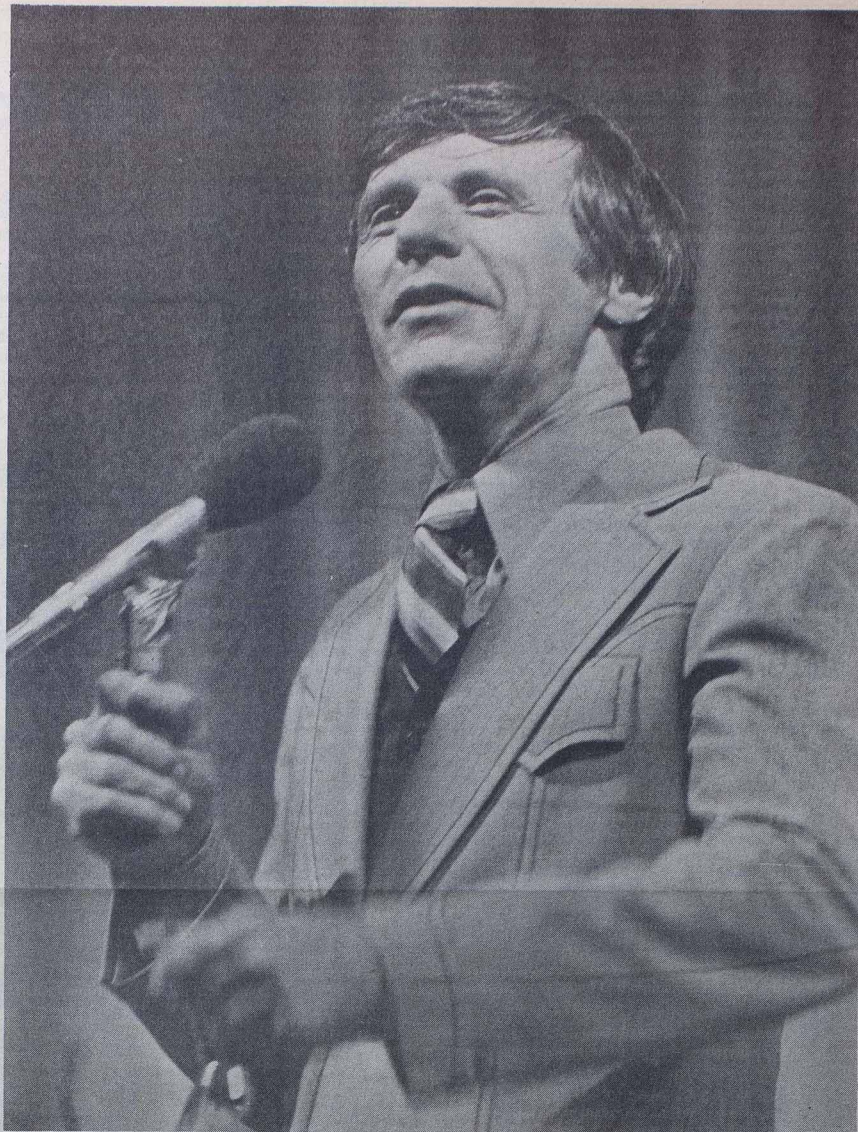

Pledging at NMSU was up once again after fall rush. Fraternity pledges numbered 12 percent more than a year ago, while sorority formal rush numbers went from 78 a year ago to 94 this fall. The increase may be due in part to a record NMSU enrollment and record freshman class size.

Homecoming dance proceeds support Greek activities

The IFC and Panhellenic helped sponsor the Homecoming Armory Dance. Each group received $674 in profit, which will support programs such as the Greek Leadership Conference held on campus Dec. 4. The money will also help support IFC-sponsored scholarship programs and Greek Week this spring.

Social violations lead to intramural maneuvering

When four fraternities received warnings during rush season for parties that lasted past the IFC-imposed curfew, a couple of them took a surprising action. Tau Kappa Epsilon and Phi Kappa Theta entered their intramural sports teams in the All-sports division, but not as fraternities. They're reason? Well, since both groups were among those warned, two more such violations could result in a charter suspension. If that were to happen, then the group would no longer be able to compete as a fraternity in intramurals. T.K.E. (not TKE, the fraternity) currently leads the intramural race.

PENNY FOR YOUR THOUGHTS—The Amazing Kreskin made his second trip to NMSU in September. The Lyceum Series sponsored the well-known performer and mentalist.

NMSU shows record enrollment

Almost every aspect of NMSU's fall enrollment for the 1982-83 school year showed an increase—a trend not typical of other universities in this time of economic crunch.

Total University enrollment stands at 6,960 students, with a 4.3 percent increase in full-time students and a 7.4 percent increase in part-time students. This is the largest enrollment in the history of NMSU.

A record number of students, more than 400, were denied admission to the University because of tougher admissions standards. This year's average freshman graduated in the top quarter of his high school class, Terry Taylor, director of admissions, said. Virtually no one from the bottom quarter of his class was admitted.

Freshman Ralph Horack has noticed students in his classes "seem to have a lot of good background from high school and know what they're doing." They are more outgoing and outspoken in class, he said, and are not afraid to voice their opinions.

The higher quality student has a higher probability of retention because "students who do better, stay" Dean of Students Terry Smith said. Consequently, the University's upper division (junior and senior students) enrollment increased 32 percent.

Academic standards are being raised at all levels, not just for admissions. Alfremita Pitts, a junior pre-osteopathy major, thinks her teachers are making the materials for classes more challenging.

"Tests and materials are being written to emphasize concepts, not memorization," she said. The quality of students in her classes is also higher because "the people who aren't serious about what they're doing are being weeded out."

In keeping with recent trends, females in this year's freshman class outnumber the males (58 percent female). The overall University enrollment is 57 percent female, but Taylor says this causes no problem.

"The University is concerned about the male-female balance only in that the nature of the University doesn't change. As long as it stays near the 55-45 percent range, we're OK."

An ideal number of students at Northeast is about 7,000 for a good student-teacher ratio, Smith said. This enables the University to continue its tradition of personalized education, an NMSU trademark.

Selby's death ends 70 years of service to NMSU

by Charles J. McClain, president

P. O. Selby served Northeast Missouri State University over a span of 70 years. His career at the University began when he was appointed secretary to President John R. Kirk in 1912 and continued during the administrations of six presidents.

As dean of the University, Dr. Selby was particularly instrumental in bringing about a number of improvements, including the elevation of academic standards; expansion of the curriculum for teacher education, especially at the fifth-year level; improvement of the quality of thesis writing; and the establishment of the awards convocation. Much of the work he started and the plans he laid as dean continue with us today.

Throughout his seven decades with the University, Dr. Selby was a flourishing writer. Much of his writing in later years was directed toward preserving in print the biographies of persons who were associated with the University and this community. He also had a great interest in Mark Twain and wrote several publications about him. He filled an important void in the Twain literature by publishing a brochure titled "In Pursuit of Mark Twain," which contains an extended chronology of the life of Mark Twain, a list of university and college theses on Mark Twain, short biographies of the persons in Mark Twain's life, a "Who's Who" in Mark Twain's life and a list of Mark Twain memorials and namesakes. In this publication, Dr. Selby also documented the contribution of the faculty of the University to Twain literature and to the interest of the University in Samuel Clemens. One illustration he used without name is the following:

"One member of the faculty at Kirksville boasts that as a very small baby he was a neighbor of Mark Twain's mother, Jane Clemens, in her last days, which were spent in Keokuk. According to his family traditions, she (Mrs. Twain) held him in her arms and said, 'You look just like my Sammy.'" What Dr. Selby didn't say was that he was that baby.

Dr. Selby was recently honored by having an article published in the Mark Twain Journal. The editor of the Mark Twain Journal sent Dr. Selby's typewritten manuscript to Yale University, which has an outstanding collection of Mark Twainia. The Yale University library cataloged Dr. Selby's manuscript in the Rare Books Collection. Dr. Selby's response to that extraordinary honor was one word: "Odd."

Dr. Selby's writing reflects an orderly mind and a genuine effort to make a serious contribution to the University in areas that others often ignore because of the discipline required to dig (in his words) into "musty and dusty" records. His writings will continue to enrich the University, including those who are here today and those who will come after us.

But what kind of man was Paul O. Selby? He was a man of enormous spirit—a person of great faith—Dr. Pauline Knobbs, his long-time colleague, tells of his inspiration. It was the morning following the fire that consumed old Baldwin Hall and the library building. A pep rally was held in Kirk Auditorium to announce the plans for the future of the school. Dr. Selby was one of the "pep" speakers. One outstanding point he made from the stage of Kirk Auditorium remains with us today. He spoke as follows:

"Next door lie the smoldering ashes of the dreams of five presidents of this school. Their spirits are sad this morning. But, students, I want you to remember that you can burn the material of a building, but you cannot burn a spirit." He continued, "Let us rally to keep alive those dreams and plan anew for a greater tomorrow and school."

The inspiration, the vast erudition and the refined methodological skill carried throughout his productive life.

His quest for knowledge and adventure kept him circling the world and going to his office almost 'til the day of his death. I received this note from him in 1971:

"Mr. Jamison and I leave next Sunday for our African adventure, flying from New York to Dakar in Senegal during the night of February 8-9. We proceed from there to South Africa, then up the east coast, visiting Victoria Falls, Murchison Falls and a lot of wild animals. Want us to bring you a hippopotamus or a rhinoceros?"

On another occasion he wrote me: "I'll be away Sept. 7 to October 10 circling the Pacific. Do the best you can without me."

Dr. Selby, we now must try to do the best we can without you.

P.O. Selby as he spoke to alumni during the '80 Homecoming banquet.

His life was tied closely to NMSU's history

Dr. Paul O. Selby, 92, died Oct. 16 in Kirksville Osteopathic Hospital, where he was a patient since Sept. 29.

Born Jan. 20, 1890, in LaPlata, he was the son of Hiram and Ella Jackson Clay Selby. On April 24, 1918, in Kirksville, he married Louise A. Willard, who preceded him in death on June 17, 1964.

Surviving are two sisters, Emma Selby Funk of Kirksville and Ruth Selby Vorhees of Quincy, Ill., and 11 nieces and nephews.

Dr. Selby attended Kirksville public schools. He received a Bachelor of Pedagogy Degree in 1911 and a B.S.E. in 1918 from the First District Normal School. He then attended Northwestern University and the University of Missouri-Columbia, where he received his A.M. in 1926. In 1934 he received his Ph.D. from the University of Iowa.

Dr. Selby taught in high schools in Bartlesville, Okla., and Carthage, Mo. In 1912 he became secretary to President John R. Kirk of the First District Normal School. Later he was promoted to registrar and served in that capacity until 1915. In 1916 he became head of the Business Education Division. From 1954 until his retirement in 1960 he was dean of instruction at NMSU.

Short leaves of absences were taken by Dr. Selby from time to time so that he could join the faculties of other institutions. He taught during the summer sessions at the State University of Iowa in 1937 and 1938, the University of Wisconsin in 1945, and Michigan State University in 1952. In 1950 and 1951 he taught for one year in Fresno California State College.

In the field of business education, Dr. Selby is the author of "The Teaching of Bookkeeping," "Principles of Business Operation," "Retail Accounting," "Bookkeeping Index," "Business Law Index," "General Business Index" and more than a hundred magazine articles.

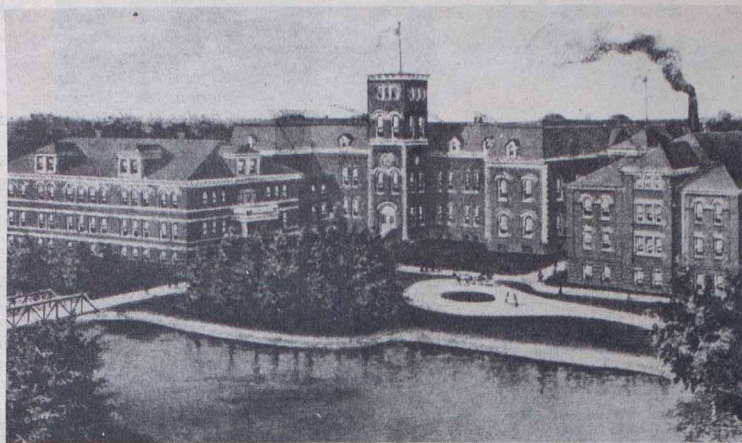

In 1932 on the NMSU campus, Dr. Selby founded Pi Omega Pi, a national fraternity in business education for undergraduate students. Pi Omega Pi became a national organization with the formation of five chapters in 1927. Dr. Selby served as the first president of the national organization from 1927 until 1929, and he was the organizer of Pi Omega Pi from 1929 to 1931.

For two years, Dr. Selby served the National Association for Business Education as its president. He has been a member of Sigma Tau Gamma honorary, Kappa Delta Pi, Phi Delta Kappa and several other collegiate societies.

Friends of Dr. Selby:

A man of P. O. Selby's stature touches many lives. His boundless good humor and caring attitude have given many of us fond memories. Please send remembrances of Dr. Selby to us for the next NEMOSCOPE.

NORTHEAST MISSOURI

... Since 1867

NORTHEAST MISSOURI STATE TEACHERS COLLEGE

NORTHEAST MISSOURI STATE COLLEGE

STATE UNIVERSITY

TRADITIONS—Five presidents dominate the history of Northeast Missouri State University. Joseph Baldwin founded the Normal School in 1867 and set the tone of academic excellence for others to follow. John R. Kirk saw the name change to Northeast Missouri State Teachers College in 1919, and Eugene Fair and Walter H. Ryle carried that name through to Ryle's retirement in 1967. Soon after, "teachers" was dropped from the name. In 1972, Charles J. McClain helped the school become Northeast Missouri State University and has guided it ever since.

On Jan. 28, 1924, President Kirk discovered a fire in old Baldwin Hall on the teachers college campus. The building and the original library building were destroyed in the fire (left), but the college soon recovered. The school was guided by President Fair until 1937 and weathered the war years under the presidency of Dr. Ryle. Its real growth period occurred during the 1950s. In 1958, members of Alpha Kappa Lambda assembled for a photo on the steps of Kirk Memorial. Had they stayed long enough, they might have seen John and Jeanne Rees Mullin seat themselves on the base of the Joseph Baldwin statue for another photo.

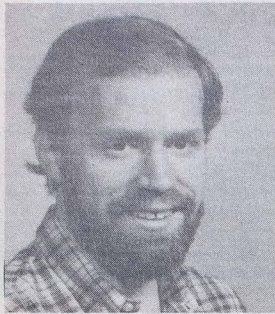

The name remained the same until after Dr. Ryle's retirement, when, in 1968, it became NMSC. This name would last only a few years—but what interesting years they were. Campus protests, sit-ins and student unrest brought college campuses into the forefront of national news. NMSC looked different again, as the long hair and style of dress among students in the Student Union Building during the early 1970s suggests.

Enrollment has continued to increase since the name was changed in 1972 to Northeast Missouri State University. Thus, more alumni received their degrees from NMSU than from any of the other names the school has known. The sight of President McClain talking with students on the modern NMSU campus is a familiar one to a majority of NMSU graduates.

Answering the Lord's call to . . .

Botswana

Scott Collins

You would not expect to find many college graduates in Africa's Kalahari Desert, especially only six months after graduation. But that is exactly where 1982 graduate Scott Collins is now.

Collins will call the African country of Botswana home for the next two years while he serves as a missionary journeyman for the Southern Baptist Foreign Mission. He is one of three recent graduates from the University who chose to begin their careers by traveling to a foreign country and experiencing its culture.

To be selected, Carol Blattner, Brent McBride and Collins went before a panel and were judged on their personality and character in relation to their assignment. Jerry Carmichael, Baptist Student Union director and campus minister, said three were chosen from NMSU because of strong leadership skills. "All three had exceptional talents and gifts."

The assignment started last summer with a training course for the 104 journeymen nationwide, preparing them for the work alongside Southern Baptist career missionaries in 42 nations.

Japan

Collins, a native of Macon, Mo., is a mass communication worker in the small village of Gaberone, located near Johannesburg. His major task is working as a radio programmer. He is responsible for writing and producing a weekly program aired on short-wave radio. Since there are no television stations in the village and only one major newspaper, the people rely on radio broadcasts.

Collins selected the position because he desired to work in an area of communications, utilizing his degree in mass communication.

Religious services, according to Collins, are in Setswana, the language most commonly spoken in Botswana. He is learning the language and the culture so that he can teach the local people how to operate the radio equipment, enabling them to continue the broadcasts when Collins leaves.

Seclusion will not be a problem for Blattner, who is assigned

West Germany

as an evangelism worker at Kobe Friendship House in Kobe, Japan. She will conduct counseling and programming during her stay at the house. Blattner, from Glenarm, Ill., graduated with a degree in recreation. Formerly, she had served as a missionary in Arizona and Missouri.

A position as a youth worker among American families in Osterholz-Scharmbeck, West Germany, was assigned to McBride of Slater, Mo. Osterholz-Scharmbeck is a town located near the U.S. military base in Wiesbaden.

While in Germany, McBride's main responsibility will be establishing a youth program. He said his home with a German family is acquainting him with the language and customs.

Carmichael said the NMSU graduates will learn a broader perspective of the world from their journeyman positions. "They will have a view of the world. They will be able to say, 'I saw the world as God would see it—people hurting, people caring, people loving.'"

Moving NMSU into the computer age

The addition of 26 microcomputers, and a proposed computer literacy requirement, will better prepare future NMSU graduates for a competitive job market.

The computer literacy requirement, proposed by the University Undergraduate Committee to help graduates in a highly technical job outlook, will require all students to achieve a level of computer competency necessary for their particular majors.

Since the current 50 computer terminals at Northeast cannot support the large number of students who need to use them, an additional 26 computers are being purchased.

The Board of Regents has approved the expenditure of $69,600 for the new SuperPET microcomputers, which will relieve some of the load put on the present IBM system. There are presently 1,250 students enrolled in computer-related courses working with the available system.

The computers will be placed in various buildings around campus. A new microcomputer lab in Violette Hall will house 16 of them, three will go to the Division of Business, two each to the Residence Life (Housing) Office and Practical Arts and Science divisions, and one is earmarked for criminal justice.

An example of the need for more computers are new computer programs to aid English students with grammar problems. The programs help students avoid sentence fragments and teach proper use of possessives, junctions, colons and pronouns.

Heinz Woehlke, assistant professor of English, said the programs are beneficial for students having problems in these areas, and teachers are directing students with problems to work with the computer.

Woehlke, the originator of the programs, said the nice thing about them is "anybody can use these programs from any terminal on campus."

Since the beginning of the semester, more than 1,200 students have taken advantage of the English language programming, which Woehlke affectionately refers to as "my baby."

Also, NMSU is considering an on-line computer system for Pickler Memorial Library. This will be unique in that, if implemented, NMSU will do away totally with the card catalogue.

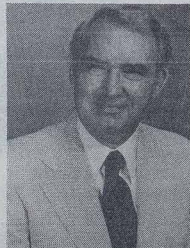

Former Board of Regents president, radio executive dies

On July 16, 1982, Samuel A. Burk died of cancer at the age of 67. From budget consultant for the U.S. Navy Bureau to general manager of KIRX/KRXL radio station, Burk left a long list of accomplishments behind him.

Appointed to the Board in 1973, Burk served as the secretary and president during his term. Before he left in 1979, Burk saw the addition of the Natatorium and the Administration/Humanities Building.

Praising Burk's effort, President Charles McClain said in a memo to Commissioner of Education Arthur Mallory, "You are exactly right about the quality of Sam's service on the Board. I have served as the Chief Executive Officer for Boards of Education, Trustees and Regents for 27 years and served with more than 60 board members. In all that time, I have never had a finer member than Sam. Not only was he an able board member, he is a good friend."

The son of Arthur and Tennie Selby Burk, he was born in Kirksville on May 24, 1915. Burk married Vera Faurot on Aug. 22, 1937. They have three daughters, Charlotte (Mrs. David) Forsythe, Stephanie and Mary Burk. He was the brother-in-law of Don Faurot, NMSU football coach from 1926-34; nephew of the late P. O. Selby, dean emeritus; and the grandfather of four, including David M. Forsythe II, starting tight-end of the '82 football team.

Burk was raised in Kirksville and graduated from Kirksville High School. He attended the University of Missouri-Columbia and played basketball on the school team for two years. He then went to Washington, D.C., where he attended the George Washington University school of business while he was employed with the Department of State. In Washington, he was also administrative assistant to Donald Nelson, director of the War Production Board. During World War II, Burk served in the Coast Guard as a procurement officer.

When the war was over he returned to Kirksville and became co-owner and manager of Radio Station KIRX, which went on the air in 1947. Later the station expanded to include KRXL-FM in 1967. McClain wrote, "Congratulations on providing the added service of stereophonic sound. . . . The community is a better place to live because of your many progressive acts. Indeed, you and Vera are involved citizens whose influence touches many." Burk's wife, Vera, is now general manager.

He was also involved in the founding of KTTN in Trenton, KNCY in Nebraska City, Neb., and KCII in Washington, Iowa.

A charter member and past president of the Missouri Broadcasters Association, Burk was an early advocate of broadcast editorials and was a member of the National Broadcast Editorial Association. In 1980, he was awarded a Missouri Medal for Journalism from the University of Missouri-Columbia where he was a member of the advisory council to the University School of Journalism and received a faculty-alumni award in 1975.

Active in the community, he was one of the organizers and first president of the Kirksville Jaycees, past president of the Kirksville Area Chamber of Commerce and the Kirksville Rotary Club. The Jaycees honored him as Boss of the Year in 1961. He had a citation by the Missouri Municipal League for outstanding leadership on behalf of city and state. He served as chairman of the Adair County Welfare Commission and was a member of the Board of Trustees at the Kirksville College of Osteopathic Medicine.

In 1978, Burk was appointed to the Governor's Commission on Campaign Reform and Official Conduct. Governor Teasdale appointed him to the Missouri Press-Bar Commission.

Former Echo editor nominated for journalism award

The editor of the 1975 Echo, Kathy Craghead, was recently named as the St. Louis Post Dispatch nominee for the high school journalism teacher of the year.

She is the high school journalism teacher at North County High School in Desloge, Mo. The competition was sponsored by the Newspaper Fund, Inc., of Princeton, N.J.

Craghead has been teaching at North County for four years. During that time her students have twice won top awards in the Missouri Interscholastic Press Association competition.

Twice they have won the Sweepstakes Award for having the most students win first-place awards. Her yearbook efforts have resulted in top state awards on three occasions.

Craghead has served as president of the Southeast Missouri Association of Teachers of Journalism for the 1981-82 school year. She currently is secretary of the Missouri Journalism Educators, the state-wide organization of high school journalism advisers.

A native of Mexico, Mo., Craghead taught three years at Winfield High School before going to Desloge.

WANTED: your old photos

Did you get your Kodak out the day old Baldwin Hall burned? Did you and your friends ever horse around in one of the residence halls or fraternity houses and someone took some pictures? Or did you and your boyfriend (or girlfriend) ever take some snapshots on the old lake or at the Bulldog Inn?

We're interested! The NEMOSCOPE staff is hoping to expand its collection of campus and Kirksville pictures taken prior to 1970. With them, we hope to illustrate future stories. The photos will then be turned over to permanent University archives for safekeeping or, if you'd rather, copied and returned to you.

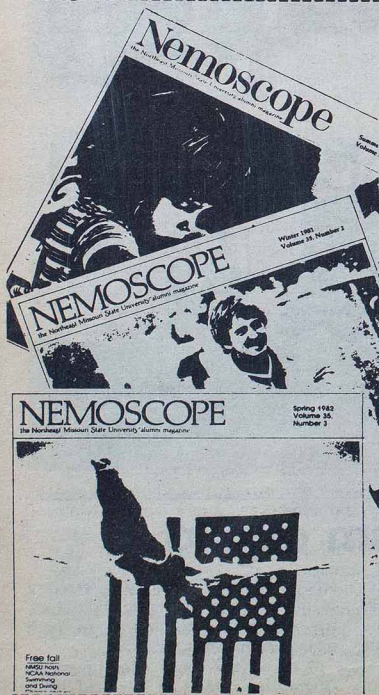

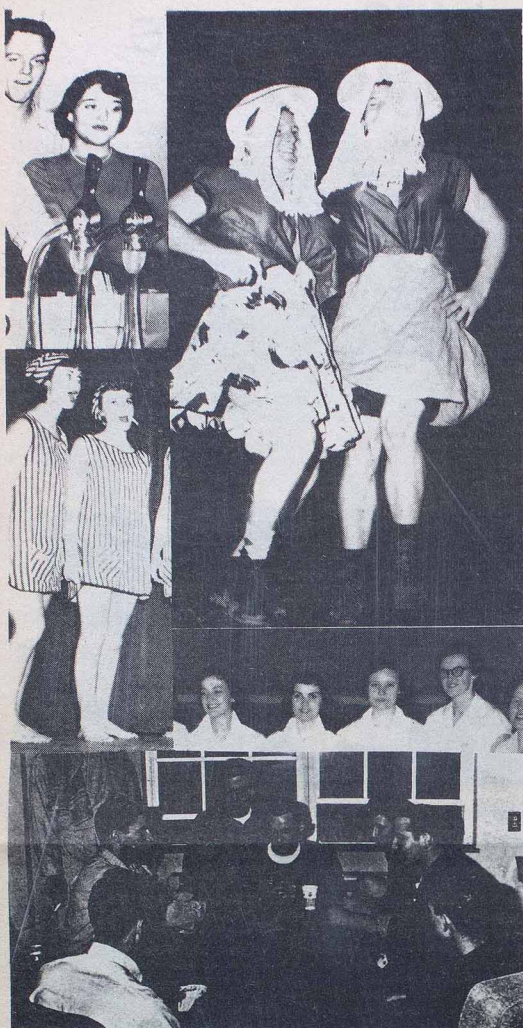

If you have pictures, please send them to the NMSU Alumni/Development Office, 202 Administration/Humanities Building with a short description of the location and people pictured. If a number of pictures of different eras are received and are of high enough quality, a portion of those sent will be published in a special picture section of a future NEMOSCOPE.

So share your best prints with the rest of us!

are being collected by the Alumni Office, so if you have any you'd like to donate, contact us. On the other hand, if you need to complete your collection, the Alumni Office has most years between 1960 and 1980.

As if it wasn't enough that Bruce Craddock's Bulldogs won the conference championship for the second consecutive year, it was the way they did it.

Sure there was one close shave, a 23-20 come-from-behind thriller that spoiled Central Missouri State's Homecoming. Other than that game, the Bulldogs seemed to dominate the conference (one that many pre-season prognosticators said was one of the toughest MIAA's ever).

First was the Homecoming game, during which a large crowd watched the 'Dogs crush Southeast Missouri State, 42-14. Then came the squeaker at Central and then a 63-13 romp over Northwest Missouri State.

By that point of the season, the football team had risen to the fourth spot in the NCAA Division II weekly poll, the highest ranking ever for a Bulldog team. The only loss of the season had come at the hands of Division I-AA Eastern Illinois, which was ranked as high as fourth in its NCAA division. That score was a heart-breaking 17-18 setback for the Bulldogs.

But, perhaps it had been a good learning experience, because the Bulldogs soon went on their tear against MIAA opponents. Following the Northwest game (which had been the most points scored by an NMSU football team since 1927), the 'Dogs topped themselves with a 70-0 shellacking of Lincoln University.

Even after this impressive string of MIAA victories, the Bulldogs' hopes of winning the conference came down to the final MIAA game at home against the University of Missouri-Rolla. A year ago, Rolla had spoiled Craddock's chances at an undefeated conference season with a win on their home field. This year, a Rolla win would have moved them into a tie with NMSU and Central for the conference championship.

"A tie is like sharing a wife," Craddock told the Index before the game. "We want this championship for our bride. We don't want to share her with anybody."

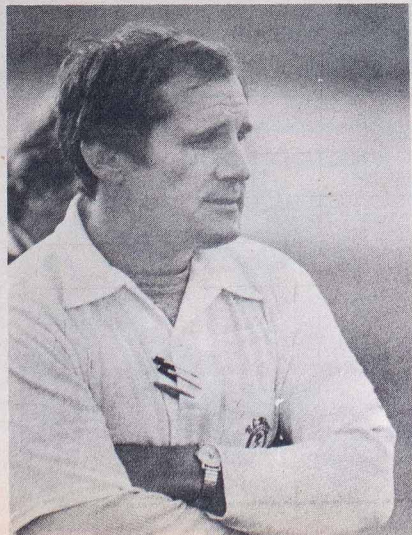

Not to worry coach; the Bulldogs dominated the Miners and won 28-7. You may now kiss the bride.

On to the playoffs!

PILE UP—Kevin Weik carries the ball in a game against Mankato State (Minn.). The Bulldogs advanced to the NCAA Division II playoffs—the first team in the MIAA Conference ever to do so—only to be defeated 34-21 by Jacksonville State (Alabama) on Nov. 27. The Bulldogs finished the season 9-2, setting several records.

Bulldogs dominate All-conference squad

“We have a good family-type atmosphere. . . . They are willing to make a lot of sacrifices and share in our success.”

—Bruce Craddock, MIAA Coach of the Year

“Consecutive” seems to be the word for the Bulldog football team in 1982.

In addition to winning the conference for the second consecutive year, Bruce Craddock was Coach of the Year for the second consecutive year. Consecutive Most Valuable Player awards have gone to quarterback Tom Hayes.

Yes, “consecutive” really does seem to fit the Bulldogs nicely this year. Especially if you add that placekicker Dave Austinson tied the NCAA record for most points kicked after touchdowns in a row for both a season and a career. The Bulldogs’ consecutive winning streak extended to eight games prior to the setback in the playoff quarterfinals. And the Bulldogs dominated the MIAA All Conference team for the second consecutive season.

When the MIAA all-conference selections were announced in mid-November, the Bulldogs had placed 22 players on the teams. Elijah Lockhart, a defensive lineman, joined Hayes as a unanimous first team All-MIAA pick.

Also named by the league, coaches were junior flanker Rich Otte, junior offensive tackles Paul Eckhoff and Brian Neubauer, senior offensive guard Kevin Collins, senior place-kicker Dave Austinson, senior defensive tackle Tim Gildehaus, junior linebacker Dan Shelby, senior strong safety Kelvin Cunningham and senior punter Dave Bormann.

A memorial to NMSU's Mr. Music—John C. Goetze

EDITOR'S NOTE: Last Christmas a group of carolers traveled to Kirksville Manor Nursing Home. A student journalist in the group noticed a man following along behind them. As ever, John Goetze was attracted to young people.

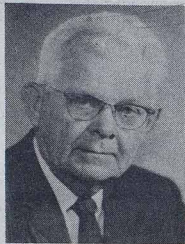

Mr. Goetze passed away on Aug. 21, about six months after the student reporter wrote a story about him for the Index. Although she met the man during a time of his life when his mind and body were failing, Sally Troutman was impressed by his ability and history. Her feature, which ran in the April 1, 1982, Index, serves as a touching tribute to a man who will long be remembered by friends from his NMSU career.

by Sally Troutman

As the group of singing carolers passed each room, he scooted along behind them. He was constantly moving, never interfering or speaking but going with the flow. When the young women began to leave, he shuffled toward the door.

"He was a music teacher," the woman in uniform said as she kept back the shell of a man.

John C. Goetze was not just another music teacher. He was born into music—a musical genius. Johannes Goetze, John's father, was a member of an orchestra conducted by Brahms, played second violin to Strauss and studied under Wagner and Liszt, all famous musicians of the late 19th century. Johannes left Germany for Missouri of which he said, "Missouri, U.S.A., is good enough for me." From his conservatory of music in Moberly, Mo., Johannes went to teach at Kirksville Normal School.

John C. Goetze

His son would soon follow in his footsteps. John Goetze came to Kirksville State Teachers College after teaching in area schools, including the junior high school in Kirksville where his portrait is still displayed. Goetze said he came to the college at Kirksville because "it had the background of good teaching." Goetze was conductor of the college orchestra and band, teaching instrumental music and theory classes.

Goetze was also a composer. Two of his most noted works of music are his "Mass in B flat Minor" and "The KSTC March." For many years, the band played the march before football games.

Goetze collaborated with local lyricist Gordon Collett, and many of their songs were played by area dance bands. One tune was even to be performed by Nat King Cole, but the singer died before its introduction.

Tom Ritchie, professor of music at NMSU, said Goetze wrote many of his works in one sitting whenever "the notion hit him."

Maybe more important than his musical talent, though, was his talent for gaining respect. Students, faculty and friends—it seems everybody liked John.

Dale Jorgenson, head of the Division of Fine Arts, said Goetze was often comforting to him and others in the music department. Tom Duden, former student and fellow faculty member with Goetze, said Goetze always showed concern for others. "If I had a problem," Duden said, "I could always go to him."

He served as adviser to Sigma Tau Gamma fraternity for 22 years. The Goetze Educational Foundation still supervises the fraternity's scholarship program. The fraternity ranked high in academics and service under Goetze, and the men showed their appreciation for his dedication by hosting a banquet for him before he retired in 1965.

Jorgenson, Duden and Ritchie said Goetze always spoke highly of his wife, affectionately calling her Dodo (short for Dorothy). Although he is Catholic, he respected his wife's Episcopalian affiliation.

Ritchie said Goetze would often attend Catholic services and then go to church with Dorothy, too. After she died, Goetze dedicated time and money for the improvement of the organ at the Episcopal Church in her memory.

Goetze had the reputation of becoming friends with young couples and children. "He enjoyed getting out and being with young people," Ritchie said. To hear some of the once-young people talk, they enjoyed his company as much as he enjoyed theirs. "I can't imagine that John was ever hard to get along with. Anything was all right with John."

Larry Stephens, assistant professor of history, met the Goetzes about 15 years ago through a young couple who lived close to the Goetzes. Stephens said the Goetzes were a loving couple who shared their love with Stephens and his young family. "Our kids consider John as an adopted grandparent," Stephens said.

Susan See met Goetze when she worked at Stout's Music House about four years ago. He would come in to visit after his daily walk. Goetze would "tickle the ivories" there with his songs.

One song was especially pleasing to See, but Goetze had never put it on paper. After a little prodding, he wrote the song on manuscript paper, entitled it "Susan's Song" and presented it to her.

When he first came to Kirksville Manor Nursing Home he was often found at the piano playing his songs. Even the residents and workers can't talk Goetze into playing anymore. One nurse's aide said Goetze finally admitted he was afraid of making a mistake.

His character depicts the words of his father's former teacher, Richard Wagner, when he said, "Music unites mankind by an ideal bond."

Goodbye, Mr. Goetze.

Division Update: Education

'The people who graduate will be better prepared as teachers'—Daniel Ball, Education Division

The bachelor of science in education has become the only degree on campus which requires a score on both the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) and the American College Test (ACT) before graduation.

Last spring the Education Division made the decision for all education majors to take the SAT upon entering the program. In October, all 1,100 education majors were asked to take the exam free of charge on a volunteer basis. Daniel Ball, head of the division, said this method resulted in a high degree of cooperation from the students.

The motive was to prepare the University for the future, since the state of Missouri is currently considering the SAT as a requirement for students being admitted to teacher education programs.

Not only will the test be good experience for students—Ball said it will enable the University to have an input into the required score. "We wanted our students to be a part of that data so that we could have some say as to what the score will be when the state is contemplating a minimum score."

Ball said the University can take immediate action when a minimum score is established. If the score is lower than the tests at NMSU have shown, then the education program will know its effectiveness. However, if the minimum score is higher, the instructors will be able to assess their programs to meet the requirement.

The long range purpose of the test is to maintain and strengthen high standards in teachers of the state and in the nation. "Five years from now, the people who graduate will be better prepared as teachers, and teachers will have better individuals to work with," Ball said.

Elementary education majors must already maintain the highest required grade point average on campus. Upon entrance and exit of the program, elementary education students must have a 2.75 grade point average on a 4.0 scale, while the graduation requirement for all other education majors is only 2.5.

Although these conditions might temporarily lower the number of students enrolled, Ball said an improved program and a more qualified entering student will be achieved.

The motive, he said, is to strengthen the teaching profession. "We have to improve not only our people; we have to improve the teacher's salary. To improve those conditions it will take financial help for schools and a better quality of teachers."

Judy and George Nelson relive Homecoming memories

Twenty-five years ago, Bulldog quarterback George Nelson lost his two front teeth during the Homecoming game at Stokes Stadium.

Meanwhile, Judith Paradise was experiencing one of her biggest college thrills as the Homecoming Queen.

Little did George and Judy know they would have anything more in common than the highs and lows of that 1957 Homecoming. Yet, 25 years later they would return to campus as husband and wife to be the masters of ceremonies at the 1982 Homecoming Queen coronation.

"I used to kid him about not voting for me (for 1957 queen)," Judy said. "We weren't dating then."

George probably had other things on his mind at the time, such as the knee injury he had suffered before the Homecoming game, the teeth he lost during the game and the leg he broke afterwards. That game was the last game of his college football career.

It wasn't until the next year that George and Judy got to know each other through a literature class they had together. Their first date took place the last week of their junior year. They kept in touch that summer, however, while George was working as a bodyguard for his cousin, singer Rick Nelson, on a personal appearance tour.

They were married after graduation. Sharing common interests in education and children, the Nelsons have raised five children. George now teaches at Quincy (Ill.) High School, and Judy is an educational adviser at John Wood Community College.

The Nelsons enjoyed their trip back to what they called a "bigger and better" NMSU campus. In fact, the former Homecoming Queen and college quarterback are planning to return for this spring's alumni football game.

While some students claim to leave a piece of themselves at their alma mater, that especially holds true for George. "Somewhere at Stokes Stadium are the remains of two of my front teeth."

Senior's musical composition wins Chicago Brass Quintet competition

For some people, dreaming about the Academy Awards is just that—a dream. But for NMSU senior Mark Scearc, going to the Academy Awards is a goal. "I'll be there someday," he says with a smile. He hopes to accomplish that by writing music scores for movies.

That goal may seem closer to reality now that he has won a prestigious contest for young composers which earned him the privilege of having his winning song published as well as performed and recorded by the Chicago Brass Quintet. Not only will he gain recognition in the music world for winning the contest, he will also receive royalties from the album and a $1,000 cash prize.

Mark's song, "The Enchanted Forest Suite," was selected from entries submitted by composers in 15 Midwestern states in the Composition Contest for Brass Quintet sponsored by the Union League Civic and Arts Foundation and the Chicago Brass Quintet.

"His was number one from the outset of the competition (after reading through and listening to tapes of all entries)," Ross Beacraft, Quintet manager and lead horn player, says. "His work was fresh sounding and proved to be the strongest melodically. It was very well written, original, pleasing and playable by a large number of people, both students and professionals."

Mark describes his winning composition as a "fantasy piece" in four movements: Dawn of the Forest, Dance of the Gnomes and Faeries, Song of the Water Nymphs, and Flight of the Unicorn. "Composing is like painting a picture with music. I tried to paint a picture of an enchanted forest," Mark says.

For Mark, composing music is a labor of love he began at the Kirksville Senior High School and developed in college. When he entered NMSU, Mark says he was a "mass of energy, talent and dreams," but college helped to give him some direction. He credits professors of music, Dr. Tom Ritchie and Dr. Roger Cody with guiding him in the development of his musical talents.

Mark's inception into the world of music started with fifth grade band class. Since then he has learned to play several instruments, concentrating on french horn in recent years. He will graduate in May with a BM degree in horn performance and a BA in philosophy and religion. Following graduation he plans to earn a master's in music in composition.

Jinx plagues new Pershing Arena floor

Jinxes have plagued the world for as long as man can remember. From the death of an albatross for sailors at sea, to the "gremlins" which harassed allied aircraft in World War II, to the black cat which crosses one's path, jinxes have played a supposed part in accidents and disasters throughout history.

The gym floor in the Pershing Building may fit in this category.

In the fall of 1979, renovations made to the Pershing Building included the gym floor. The floor was turned from east to west, with the new wooden slats facing north and south.

In the summer of 1980, the first sign of the "jinx" appeared. The basketball scoreboard fell, disrupting activities in the gym.

"They (students) were playing tennis at the time. It (the scoreboard) came right down on the net," Ken Gardner, director of athletics, said.

He added that it "tore the hell out of the scoreboard," but as for the floor, it only "put a couple of nicks in it."

Gardner said it was lucky it did not happen a few days earlier. "A week before, we were packed with junior high girls for a basketball camp," he said.

The next incident happened in June 1981, when an unusual amount of rainfall caused over one-half inch of water to flood the Pershing Arena. The water, which entered the building through the women's dressing room window, caused edge-cupping in the floor. Each board warped cross-ways.

The floor cost the University $25,000 to replace, which came from state appropriations.

The final (we hope) incident happened in late July of last year. The floor once again flooded, but not as bad as the previous year. Gardner said the floor was repaired by sanding it.

"We had two brand new floors in one year. Those floors don't come cheap," he said.

Gardner said the floor is not jinxed, regardless of the problems connected with it. "I don't believe in jinxes," he said, "but it has become rather expensive. I blame it on renovation. . . . It has to be."

Yes, Gardner says he does not believe in jinxes, but "we sit around and keep our fingers crossed whenever it rains."

Division Update: Home Economics

Division receives 10-year accreditation

The Home Economics Division is now one of only four such programs in Missouri colleges with American Home Economics Association accreditation.

"I find it hard to tell people how excited I am," Dr. Lydia Inman, head of the division, said. "We thought we had a good program, though small (180 students and eight faculty). It's great to have confidence placed in you by your peers."

The accreditation is primarily concerned with undergraduate programs preparing future professionals for careers in business, education, dietetics, food service and community agencies.

Included in the accreditation process is a review of activities such as graduate instruction, in-service faculty education and research. A program must meet minimum standards of academic excellence set by the profession to receive accreditation.

Universities are chosen through a detailed self-evaluation study and an on-site visit by an evaluation team. The accreditation is granted for a 10-year period.

Dr. Inman said the division is continuing to improve the program. "We aren't quitting now that we have it."

The Home Economics Division offers four majors: child development, clothing and textiles retailing, general home economics and vocational home economics education. A two-year certificate program in child development is also offered. In addition, there is a strong, growing interest in a foods and nutrition emphasis among general home economics majors.

Floridian says he's 'still looking for Annette. . .'

Phil Wilson ('69)

down here looking for Annette."

His home in Port Charlotte, Fla., is not Wilson's only accomplishment since he graduated from NMSU in 1969 with degrees in business administration and business education. Now, his expertise lies in real estate, and he is broker-owner of Wilson Realty in Port Charlotte. In February he was awarded the Certified Commercial Investment Member designation by the Realtors National Marketing Institute, an affiliate of the National Association of Realtors.

The CCIM designation is awarded only to highly-educated specialists who apply their market experience and intensive study to help clients analyze and meet investment objectives.

"The knowledge that I have achieved from the CCIM has been a tremendous help," Wilson says, "but just as important is the mental attitude that you have the award and what you had to do to get it. It gives you the initiative to go up to someone and sell them a piece of property."

Wilson got into the real estate business because of some advice from his father. "My dad was a salesman and he told me, 'if you're going to be a salesman, whatever you sell, make sure you don't have to move it after you sell it and make a lot of money for what you sell—that's what real estate is. So here I am selling real estate."

While studying for the real estate courses, Wilson said he realized the importance of his education at NMSU and found he could apply it in various ways.

"I kept asking myself, 'What am I learning this for? But I learned through school how to find information and how to put it together so that I could use it."

As far as life on the beach is concerned, he says, "I'm still looking for Annette. . ."

Division Update: Language & Literature

'The English department is making a strong statement that writing is necessary and basic.'

In a continuing effort to upgrade the English composition I classes, a competency essay is now required before students may receive their end-of-semester grades.

The essay, developed by the English Composition Committee, is one of a series of improvements developed over several years.

Shirley Morahan, assistant professor of English and committee head, said, "We're quite certain of the quality of our English composition classes. The English department is making a strong statement that writing is necessary and basic."

The thesis-development essay was assigned to all composition I classes last month during class time. The 300-500 word essays were to include an introduction, body and conclusion, and make a thesis statement.

The essays were then read and evaluated by other composition instructors, and graded according to organization, expression and mechanics. Head of the Division of Language and Literature, Ed Carpenter said, "Grades will be withheld until a student can demonstrate a literate essay."

Chandler Monroe, professor of speech, said he approved of the essay, "I am for anything that will make students realize that literate writing is a necessary part of their professional growth and development. Writing is something that is important not just in their English courses, but in every other class as well."

Freshman Jennifer Higgins said, "I didn't mind writing the essay, but I didn't have enough time to write a rough draft. It did help me with thesis development."

Division Update: Mathematics

More math teachers is goal of new division head

The newly-appointed head of the Division of Mathematics, Dr. Lanny Morley, has set a personal goal for the coming years—to get people interested in teaching mathematics.

He is not too sure how to go about it since higher salaries in private business are luring teachers away, but he thinks Missouri is making progress with better public awareness of the situation. "It's in the news all the time and people are becoming aware that they will have to support public education to solve the problem," Morley says.

In the meantime, more students continue to enroll in the computer science program and fewer in math education. "Our computer science program has grown more rapidly than we expected," he says, adding that NMSU's future growth in the field will "probably be determined by the availability of faculty and computer facilities."

He has experienced this expansion firsthand in his 12 years of teaching mathematics at NMSU. This year, he continues to teach while serving, as division head, a position he assumed in August when Dr. Dale Woods retired.

Morley received his B.S.E. ('62) and master's degree ('64) from NMSU and went on to earn a specialist degree from the University of Illinois, Urbana, and a doctorate from the University of Missouri-Columbia—all in mathematics.

Morley, who has taught at the Kirksville High School, Northwestern R-I Schools, and UMC, believes that all graduates from the mathematics division, not just education majors, should have extensive math training. "We want to continue to produce graduates who are well trained in mathematics. Even our computer science majors have solid mathematics backgrounds. This makes them more employable and provides for more upward mobility because of increased ability and versatility," he says.

Originally from Green City, Morley and his wife Beth have three children. Their oldest daughter, Sara, is a freshman at NMSU, majoring in elementary education with an emphasis in mathematics.

Ross Allen fulfills senior prophesy; 'go out and do great things'

As Ross Allen rises to begin the 1942 class reunion during Homecoming, his presence fairly dominates the head table. His bearing, voice and diction indicate his distinguished career as an operatic stage director and university professor.

"I have to admit to being Ross Allen," he says, "even though I may not be that dapper fellow you remember."

That once-dapper fellow may have changed physically over the years, but he has not failed to fulfill a prophesy he wrote in the 1942 Echo. On page 33, under the heading "More of the Senior Story," are these words penned by Allen:

"The diploma is one autograph everyone has got to collect. . . . After that I'm in the doubtful category known as an alumnus." He continued, "Nothing to do but go out and do great things."

For Allen, "great things" meant a detour to World War II, then further education at the University of Indiana (Bloomington). He wound up staying at Indiana and teaching in the opera department at that university—at least, when he's not in New York or elsewhere helping to stage operatic productions.

In fact, Allen flew to the 1942 class reunion from New York City. If the airplane ride was any indication of his desire to attend, then, as he told the reunion crowd, "I must have wanted to come into Kirksville in the worst way."

Although he still teaches opera at Indiana, Allen's time is often occupied with other pursuits. For example, he is doing a show in December in Washington, D.C., and another in March in Basel, Switzerland (his first time in Europe).

But the events of the next few months were not on Allen's mind during the Homecoming reunion. Rather, he and his classmates took the time to remember Northeast and look at the changes since their days in Kirksville.

"I could remember the time when no one in this room could pronounce 'pizza,' let alone know what it meant or have children who seemed to exist on them," Allen said.

"Herpes was thought of as an incorrect answer on a mythology test," he continued. "And code on a crossword puzzle meant honor or ethics—not ZIP or area."

Even as Ross Allen's personal experience after college was interrupted by the war, so are his memories of NMSU influenced by it. He remembers a large group of students listening to F.D.R.'s declaration of war on Dec. 8, 1942, in Kirk Auditorium.

The day before, he had first heard the news that would soon change his life. During a break in the band's rehearsal, someone came back telling of the attack on Pearl Harbor.

"Barrett Stout allowed as how this would probably change our lives, but he didn't know whether it would be four months or four years. 'So we might as well continue practice.'"

As he tells the story, his face twists into the same smile which proves he really is the "dapper" Ross Allen of old.

them to do because they want to do it."

Caine views his teaching job as "turning people on to ideas." This, he says, is a 24-hour job much like that of a doctor or member of the clergy because it involves being available to students at all times. "It's much more than a job; it's a calling."

Caine received his B.S. degree in biology from William and Mary at Williamsburg, Va., and went on to earn his master's degree and Ph.D. in social psychology from the University of Florida at Gainesville. Alone in the crowd

by Glenn Changar, student writer

Randy Hultz can claim many "firsts" in his life, and most of them are connected with his scholastic career at NMSU.

He was a charter member of Delta Sigma Pi, the professional business fraternity, and later became its president. Also, he graduated from undergraduate school at the age of 20, passed his certified public accountant examination while still in school and is currently teaching accounting at Southwest Missouri state University (Springfield).

Another first for Hultz is his status as the first student to earn a master's degree in accountancy at NMSU. While working toward his master's degree, he was also a temporary part-time assistant instructor of accounting.

"I don't think we'll have any better than Randy, and we were just tickled to death that he was the first graduate (of the master's program)," Bill Holper, director of the graduate program in accounting, said.

The Master of Accountancy and the Master of Science in Accounting programs at NMSU are new additions to the Division of Business curriculum.

The Master of Accountancy program is designed to prepare graduates to enter the fields of public, industrial and governmental accounting, and accounting education. These entry-level positions will command a higher salary than the B.S. graduate because of added strength in academic preparation.

The Master of Science in Accounting program was prepared for students with undergraduate degrees in areas other than accounting. The program is designed to prepare students for the same areas of accounting as the Master of Accountancy, but is special in that it is only offered to non-accounting majors.

Robert Dager, head of the Division of Business, said these are both important programs for students considering an accounting profession. "The accounting profession itself is moving toward a five-year education process," he said.

Dr. Dager said the University is looking for "high-quality students" for the program, and therefore, there is a "selected admissions program limited to 15 (students) each program."

Hultz said the master's program was beneficial to all concerned. "I feel pretty good about that (the master's program)," Hultz said, "not only for me, but for the school, also."

"The program itself is going to grow more because the job market is going to get tight," he said.

Hultz was happy with his NMSU education. "I've always thought, and I still do, that Northeast is a great school. I really can't praise the school enough as far as education goes."

Anita E. Davis and husband, James, live in Montgomery City, Mo. She is a fourth grade teacher and he is a mechanic.

Scott and Sharry Longellier Willoughby and son, Richard, are living in Lee's Summit, Mo. Both are teachers.

Pamela Carl Leming and husband, George, live in Waterloo, Iowa. She is a teacher and nurse and he is a teacher.

David L. Thomas, Shawnee, Okla., is a purchasing agent for Mobil Chemical.

Susan Conway Bonnem, husband, Brian, and daughter, Melanie, live in Carpentersville, Ill. She is a former teacher and he owns a dry-cleaning business.

Donald E. Cox, Macon, Mo., is electrical maintenance supervisor.

Division Update: Nursing

All nursing graduates taking Missouri boards pass

NMSU's Nursing Division is one of only two baccalaureate programs in the state which can boast that 100 percent of this year's students taking the Missouri board examination passed the first time.

Theresa Brewer, a 1982 nursing graduate, described the tests as "anxiety-causing." She felt that a change in the testing process may have been a factor in the high percentage of passing grades the first round.

In the past, the examination was administered in five sections, and each section was scored separately. One section had to be passed before moving on to the next. Now, the two days of test-taking are divided into four sections of questions randomly selected from all areas of nursing, from pediatrics to geriatrics to psychology. Brewer preferred this method. "Your strong areas could pull you through your weak ones" with the new system, she said.

The Nursing Division has grown to a total enrollment of 200 since its re-entry into University curriculum in 1971 under the direction of former division head Dr. Grace Devitt. The division currently admits 60 freshmen each year to keep enrollment at the minimum of 45 junior and senior students who take clinical courses.

The number of freshmen admitted may have to be reduced in future years because more students are staying with the program until completion. "It seems like we're getting a better quality of student," Keela Day, interim division head, said.

Interest in the nursing organization is increasing, too. With that growth has come a desire for representation at state and national levels.

Missy Rowe, senior, holds an office in the state Student Nurses Association, and Matt McGahan, senior, serves as secretary treasurer of the National Student Nurses Association.

A replacement for Dr. Devitt, retired division head, is still being sought. "We do have potential candidates that we're exploring," Day said. "The committee is still very active."

$2 million Science Hall renovation to begin

Renovations and improvements are the watchwords at Science Hall these days.

Science Hall is soon to receive $2,143,507 in appropriations for repairs, renovations and equipment improvements. The funds come from a $600 million economic recovery bond, of which NMSU is to receive $3,346,469 this year. The bond was passed in a special June 8 election in Missouri.

Renovation of Science Hall will concentrate on the original building constructed in 1955.

Dean Rosebery, head of the Division of Science, said the improvements are necessary because, in 1954, "we had about one fourth the number of faculty members that we have now in science."

He said the outside structure will stay the same, but the inside will be repaired. "It was really designed as an industrial building," he said. "All the plumbing will have to come out. . . . It was getting to be an emergency situation—where it had to be done."

While an architect has not yet been chosen for the job, Rosebery has an idea of what the renovations will involve. "Each faculty member will be conducting research, therefore, we will need research space, in addition to classroom and lecture space," he said.

Also, the greenhouse will be incorporated into the building, Rosebery said. All the renovations will be done with energy conservation in mind.

Other renovations in Science Hall will include ramps for the handicapped, which are presently being built, and the addition of two Commodore SuperPET microcomputers to the division. These will be used in classroom and laboratory situations.

Rosebery said of the renovations, "Terrific. It will probably last for another 30 years."

Oreta Marie Walker of Kirksville, died June 5, 1982. She was the wife of Charles S. Walker 1965, who survives. She is also survived by a son, Homer Walker 1977 and a daughter, Cheryl Walker 1977. Funeral and burial services were held in Kirksville.

Golden L. Carr 1923 died May 19, 1982, in Washington, D.C., where she and her husband, Dr. Paul O. Carr 1923, lived.

Division Update: Social Science

'Value-added' improving the range of knowledge

When the Social Science faculty became aware that some students were not receiving adequate preparation in their general education courses, faculty members met to evaluate the courses and outline the knowledge each course required. The result is a stronger curriculum.

Efforts to improve the division began prior to the implementation of NMSU's value-added program, but gained support from the concept. James Lyons, head of the division, said value-added education, a theory implemented by President Charles McClain, is improving the range of knowledge each student receives at Northeast. The results are visible on sophomore and senior tests, which indicate how a student stands on the national level.

"The major effect that value-added has had on the system is to cause the faculty to renew their commitment to liberal arts majors," he said. "We are having a substantial impact on many students, but many have still not been challenged."

The most important commitment to liberal arts, Lyons said, is to instill in students "intellectual and personal qualities that will allow a first job and advances all along the way. Our goal is to help them remain competitive."

Besides improving general education courses, improvements are underway within areas in the social sciences. Instructors noticed during the advisement process that many students were specializing—not taking the courses intended as the core of their area of study. To combat the problem, Lyons said the advisement process has been revised so that the adviser will take time "to see where students have been."

Positive results are beginning to reward the division for its efforts. After senior tests were compiled last year, 52 percent of the psychology majors scored above the national average, compared to 22 percent the previous year. Of those taking the test, 12 percent ranked in the top 10 percent nationally.

Tel-Alumni exceeds goal

Tel-Alumni '82 surpassed its $70,000 goal during the fourth week of the fund-raising program.

The goal was met early on the next-to-last night as Delta Chi and Sigma Tau Gamma fraternities competed for one of the trophies being presented to the four organizations raising the most money for the project. Delta Chi ended the campaign in first place among all campus organizations, with a total of $2,060 for the night and $4,933 over the four weeks of the project.

NMSU's program is different from that of most other institutions in that students call alumni, said Les Duseith, staff assistant in public relations. "Some (schools) have alumni call other alumni. We decided to use student volunteers because we wanted to contact all alumni we possibly could. Most had never been asked to donate before."

The individual competition winner was junior Tim Boozan from New Port Richey, Fla., with $4,465 in pledges. Junior Julie Moore from Blue Springs, Mo., raised $4,035 and Scott Tanner, junior from Centralia, Mo., placed third with a total of $2,450.

Boozan contributed his success to the competition involved, especially with Moore, who challenged him for the lead throughout this year's program. He said, as the competition gets stiff, one naturally tries harder.

The calling methods of Boozan and Moore are totally different, yet both are successful.

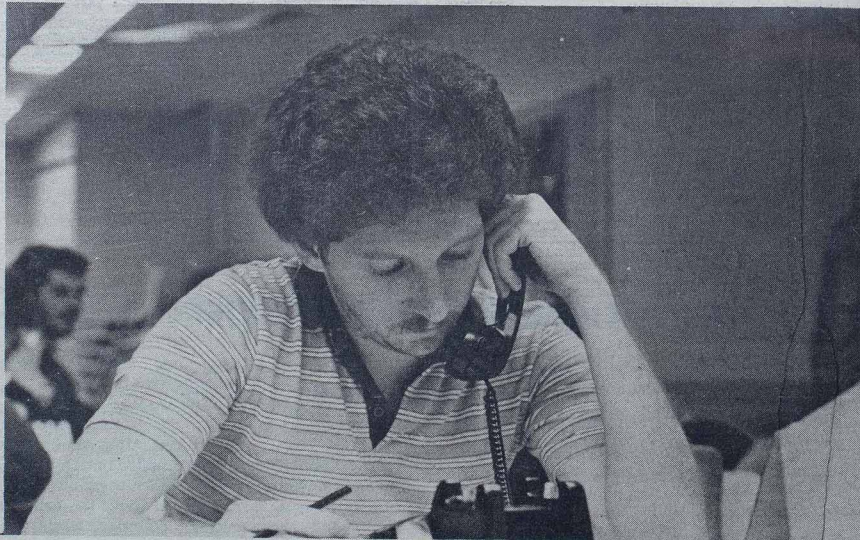

"Tim is a charmer while Julie is just a very efficient caller," Duseith said. "I sit and listen to them, and their techniques are almost exactly opposite. Julie is cordial and friendly but averages less time per call than Tim. Tim can't resist spending a few minutes talking to the alumni about the weather, or the Bulldogs, or his fraternity or anything else he can think of."

Competition for the top organization came down to the last few minutes of the campaign. A flurry of pledges in the final minutes brought defending champion Delta Sigma Pi close to the lead. Their final total of $4,908 fell just $25 short of Delta Chi's total. The other top organizations were the Student Senate with $4,702 and the Student Activities Board with $3,610.

The Tel-Alumni project is designed to raise $2 million by the year 1990. Money raised through the program is being placed into the University's general development fund to finance scholarships and increase academic programs in the future.

The grand total represents only money pledged through phone calls and does not include pledges of approximately $5,000 from alumni who have contributed through the mail rather than by phone.

University President Charles J. McClain established the program in 1980 to raise money for the NMSU Development Fund. In 1980, about $50,000 was raised, followed by $60,000 a year ago. The final total of money pledged this year was $77,900.

NOW YOU KNOW—For more than 100 alumni, that voice on the other end of the line belonged to NMSU junior Tim Boozan. His total of $4,465 pledged during the campaign was more than every organization except two, and it was the highest individual total ever for a Tel-Alumnicaller.

Alumni establish three new scholarships

Roy and Cleo Allen Memorial Scholarship

The Roy and Cleo Allen Memorial Scholarship, established in memory of long-time residents of the Downing area, was made possible recently through a gift by Mr. and Mrs. Walker Allen of Columbia, Mo. They are the son and daughter-in-law of Roy and Cleo Allen.

President Charles McClain said the scholarship will be used to help finance the education of a superior NMSU student from Schuyler or Scotland counties. The first scholarship is expected to be awarded for the 1983 fall semester and each year thereafter.

"I salute the Allens for their commitment to this area of the state and the role quality education plays in it. I am pleased the Allens have chosen to recognize outstanding academic achievement as a criteria for the scholarship," President McClain said.

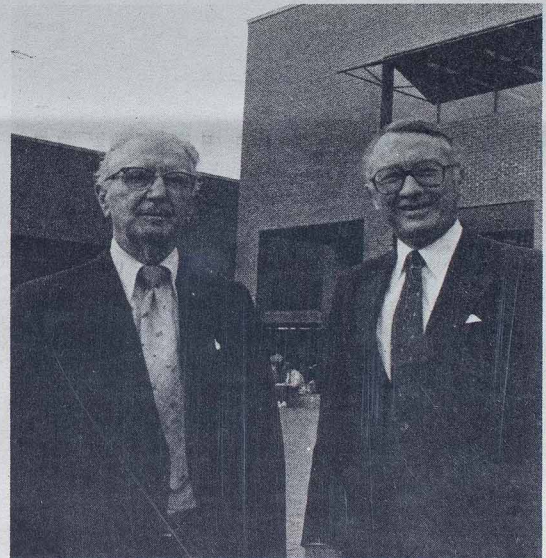

Mr. and Mrs. Walker Allen

Wilbur Kimbley Scholarship

Wilbur Kimbley ('28) has established a scholarship in his name to be awarded beginning with the 1983 fall semester. Kimbley, a native of Novelty, Mo., worked his way through NMSU teaching part of the year and attending classes during the summer sessions.

He served as superintendent of schools in Baring, Winigan and Osgood, Mo. Before his retirement, he was head of the industrial arts department for the Leavenworth, Kan., schools.

His first wife, the former Bessie Brink of Sturgeon, Mo., also attended NMSU. She died in 1969. He later married Foreste Ross, and they now live in Leavenworth, Kan.

Wilbur Kimbley ('28) and President McClain

Fannie McCully Scholarship

Mr. and Mrs. Howard McCully of Kampsville, Ill., have established the Fannie McCully Scholarship at NMSU in honor of Mr. McCully's mother. Howard is a 1933 graduate of NMSU and for many years was in the orchard business in St. Louis County.

The McCullys have "retired" to Kampsville on a farm where they have started an orchard.

"When I wanted to quit college many years ago, my mother insisted that I continue. As it turned out, it was good for me and I am appreciative to my mother," McCully said.

Long-time NMSU supporters establish student loan fund

Noma Glahn ('28) of LaPlata, Mo., and Durward DeWitt ('25) of St. Joseph, Mo., have announced a gift of $10,000 for the establishment of the Noma Glahn and Durward DeWitt Student Loan Fund. The loans will be administered through the Development Fund.

Specific guidelines are being written for the program, but the loans are expected to be long-term with interest below market rates.

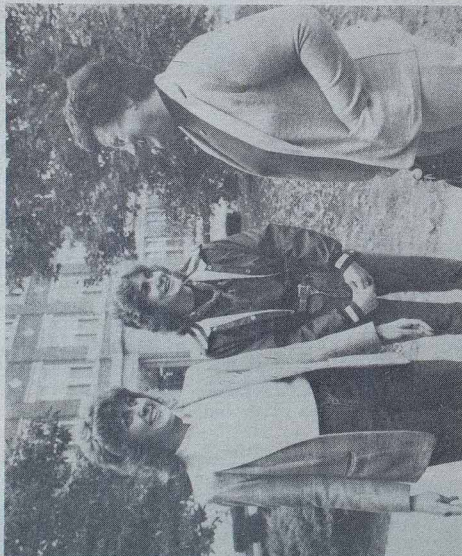

DeWitt and Miss Glahn have been long-time supporters of NMSU. Each sponsors an individual scholarship in addition to the loan fund. Both have achieved the Fellow level in the John R. Kirk Society.

They worked together for a number of years for Farmland Industries and later in private business as the founders of Glow Candle Inc.

ART SHOW WINNERS—Once again, Homecoming featured an art show by several NMSU alumni. This year's winners, Stephen Ayers, Gerald Walker and David Welch, were presented awards from NMSU Dean of Instruction Darrell Krueger.

Mom has class (with me)

FAMILY AFFAIR—Julie, junior, Jeannie, freshman, and Connie Foster, junior, share not only family life but college life at NMSU.

Remember when mom or dad tried to help with your homework? Well, Julie and Jeannie Foster's mother could probably still help with their college homework if she weren't so busy with her own.

Connie Foster, who commutes to NMSU from the family farm in Macon, Mo., faced a lot of transition two years ago when she decided to return to college after 19 years. Her youngest daughter, Jennifer, was just starting first grade. Julie was also starting her first year of college, and Jeannie was finishing her high school career.

"The same year I started college, one of my daughters (Julie) started. This past year another (Jeannie) left and started. Their lives have been changing, too," Connie says. "It has been kind of chaotic, to put it truthfully."

Not only does Connie manage to attend her classes three days a week, but she has mastered the scheduling of courses so she can be home from school about the same time as seven-year-old Jennifer. Her husband, Don, farms and runs a kennel in rural Macon.

All the Foster clan tends to excel in their coursework. After receiving a Chancellor's Scholarship to the University of Missouri-Columbia (which she attended as a freshman), Julie transferred to NMSU. She is now a junior with better than a 3.00 grade point average.

Jeannie, a freshman business administration major, received a Regents Scholarship to NMSU. She also was named 1981 Missouri Junior Miss in the Kirksville area, and received a $750 President's Honorary Scholarship as the title winner. She finished in the top 10 in the state pageant.

Not to be outdone by her daughters, Connie is the recipient of the Richard Liss Memorial Scholarship and a $300 Upperclass Scholarship.

"Since I have been in college, I have realized even how important it is to have good teachers." That is not surprising since she is an education major.

"I enjoy working with children. I believe top-quality teachers are of the utmost importance," Connie says.

Since both Connie and Julie are elementary education majors at NMSU, one might think mother and daughter would have wound up side-by-side in a classroom. So far that has not happened. However, "we compare notes on classes," Julie says.

Even if she had not excelled at NMSU, Connie has set a fine example for her daughters with her activities at home. Besides going to college and raising a family, she has been active in the United Methodist Church, a Girl Scout leader, a Macon PTO member and county chairman for the American Cancer Society. And she still leads her youngest daughter's Brownie troop one afternoon a week.

Connie thinks her education at NMSU has even helped her to be a better mother. Now she knows "what really makes them tick. I think maybe I am more appreciative of the time I have (to spend with her children)."

Remember when mom and dad were so proud of your report card? Well, in the Foster family, that feeling goes both ways.

"She really seems to like it; she has really been doing well," Julie says about her mother's NMSU career. "Sure, I am proud of her."
