

MEMORIAL

FOR ALUMNI AND FRIENDS OF NORTHEAST MISSOURI STATE UNIVERSITY

SPRING-SUMMER 1974

President's Comments

Dear Friends:

In visiting with many of you this past year, I've been impressed by two recurring themes:

- You remember Northeast Missouri State University as a friendly, personal campus. And you want your alma mater to stay that way.
- You are concerned about the rising cost of higher education. Many of you indicated that, had it not been for NMSU, you could not have attended college. And, again, you hope we can maintain our tradition of providing low cost, quality education—for today's students and for deserving students to come.

We who are on campus every day pledge to you that we will do our very best to keep the atmosphere at Northeast friendly and personal. Also, we will do everything in our power to keep the cost low. In the latter regard, however, we need your help. It is vital that our students have opportunities for additional scholarships and loans. Obviously, that takes money—dollars which are not available from state appropriations. The Northeast Missouri State University Development Fund was established for this very reason—to obtain private gifts for scholarships, as well as other needs not possible from tax dollars.

These are exciting days at your alma mater. I hope you continue to share them with us. We are more interested in your concern and affection for NMSU than in the amount of your gift. Your contribution means that you still care about Northeast Missouri State University and the students it serves.

For your convenience, you may use the envelope enclosed in this issue. I hope to hear from you soon.

Best personal regards,

Charles J. McClain

BY THOMAS R. SHROUT, JR.

In Hannibal, Missouri there is an old ice house on the river front. The exterior of the building looks much as it did in 1854 when the Stillwell Cold Storage Company opened the building. Actually the ice house was just a part of an entire waterfront industrial area, complete with "cat" house, that once flourished with the busy river traffic.

Today the ice house is all that remains. But in 1966 the curtain went up on one of the Midwest's most unique theatre experiences for college students and aspiring actors. It was that year that Northeast Missouri State University, with the cooperation of the Hannibal Foundation and the Hannibal Chamber of Commerce, founded the Ice House Theatre.

The idea for the theatre was born when Al Srnka and Jim Severns of the NMSU drama faculty concluded that their students needed more professional-like acting experience. At the same time Hannibal was interested in a summer theatre and persuaded Al and Jim to consider their city as a possible location for the theatre.

Jim and Al took them up on the idea and began to explore the city for possible locations where students could rehearse, work on sets and props and have room for classes.

They looked at a movie house, but on a limited budget suitable arrangements were impossible. Some of the local churches offered their facilities, but a lack of flexibility in scheduling posed a problem.

As Al recalls, "Jim and I were standing on the hill by the Mark Twain Home and I asked three of the Hannibal residents with whom we were working (Charles Rendlen, Jack Martin and Charles Anton), what this building was. They said it was an old ice house, so we decided to take a look. Jim and I immediately agreed that we couldn't buy the kind of atmosphere we would get at the ice house."

The river acts as a natural backdrop for the theatre where tourists come to view the life in the old town and seek to recapture a bit of the river nostalgia of the Samuel Clemens era. But on two occasions since the theatre opened, the river has extensively damaged the 120-year-old structure.

Last summer an entire wall had to be replaced and other remodeling changes made. Students and townspeople alike did most of the work and although some didn't expect it, the Ice House opened its eighth six-week season on schedule in early July.

The exterior of the building has been whitewashed and trimmed in blue. A slanted canopy that once protected ice haulers, now, though sagging, shelters theatregoers who wait to purchase tickets.

The two-foot thick concrete walls, filled with sawdust, at one time insulated apples and other fruits from hot summers. Today they keep audiences in sub 68-degree temperatures, reminding them of the time when the Ice

House was famous for Stillwell hams rather than theatre productions.

To get to the auditorium, theatregoers must stoop through an old locker plant door where the apples were stored. In the auditorium, part of a wall leading to the brine tanks has been cut out and a stage built. Old theatre seats were found at a Hannibal movie house which was being remodeled.

Behind the stage, where the brine tanks are located, dressing rooms, workshops and prop rooms have been built. All the old refrigeration equipment, typical of later years of the ice house, remains. The ancient equipment, winches, compressors and even a natural spring and pump in what is now the lobby, form the set around which the student-actors spend ten weeks of their summer.

But what the public sees six evenings and two afternoons a week is just a fraction of what the Ice House Theatre is all about.

The Ice House also involves intensive instruction in acting, set design and building, physical conditioning, impromptu acting, gymnastics and even theatre management.

Classes usually begin at 8 a.m. and run til noon. Afternoons are spent in rehearsal for one of the six plays in repertoire. Typically one of the plays is about Hannibal or Mark Twain such as last season's presentation of "Tom Sawyer."

Students who are late to either classes or rehearsal become members of the "breakfast club". These students meet at 7 a.m. with Al in Hannibal's Riverview Park for a mile-and-a-half early morning jog. It has a purpose.

"Actors have to be in shape in order to keep up with the grueling schedule. Acting is a physical skill and audiences sometimes forget this. Actors are physically and emotionally exhausted after a performance," Al says.

One particular morning last summer, 16-year-old Jill Martin, a senior at Hannibal High School was among the joggers. Jill has been with the Ice House for the past five seasons, starting out working in children's parts and finally landing a major role as Becky in "Tom Sawyer."

"Hurry up, fat Al," she teased Srnka. Srnka then raced ahead and shouted back, "Come on Martin."

The jogging all was in fun. The laughing and teasing echoed through the morning fog as it rolled off the river, split occasionally by the sun as the actor's feet slapped against the blacktop road, disturbing only a few birds feeding on the leftovers of a picnic from the night before.

After jogging, the students joined the rest of the troupe at the Trinity Episcopal Church Educational Building for movement class. The class in many ways resembled a football team doing calisthenics. Srnka rhythmically snapped his fingers as the students stretched and contorted, exaggerating every movement.

"One two three four, kick two three four, stretch two three four." Everyone strained as Srnka counted cadence.

The movement class lasted about 50 minutes before adjourning to "Mom's," a local cafe run by Mom Wilson who specializes in her breakfast menu and serves as owner, cook, waitress and cashier.

Mom's eggs, hashbrowns and black coffee are the big attraction to both the Ice House Players and a loyal group of local patrons, including a few construction workers. But everyone enjoys the other's company as discussions might range from "Who missed their lines the night before" to "Did you hear how the Cardinals did last night?"

Mom treats everyone alike and her prices are in line with struggling student-actor budgets.

After a brief rest the students returned to Riverview Park for improvisation class. There the students were joined by the two professional actors on the staff. Having professionals work with the students has been the basic concept of the Ice House since it was founded. They assist in the instruction as well as holding down some of the lead roles in the plays.

"Having the professionals work off stage as well as on stage helps students build confidence in themselves as well as assisting both feel comfortable working with the other," Srnka said.

By this time of the morning, Hannibal tourists are riding through the park on a tour bus. They stare, and rightfully so, at the 25 young people standing in the middle of a green meadow imitating statues. The exercise is beneficial and more complicated than it might sound.

Srnka, for instance, requires one student to assume the pose of an "angry" statue. He then calls on another student, without warning, to assume another pose which must react to the actions of the other student.

Perhaps the most entertaining exercise to watch is the students "building a machine." The idea is for one student to assume a part of a machine—with appropriate movement—and then for the others to spontaneously add to and become moving parts of the machine. Soon all the students are involved, each adding a sound to correspond with his individual part.

The results are delightful. In a matter of seconds the students have built a humming, wheezing, snorting, old-time sewing machine, with foot pedal and bobbin.

"The idea is for the actors to first feel comfortable with one another and secondly to learn to respond to the other's actions and motions. An actor must learn to trust the other person on stage or else he won't be convincing or plausible to the audience.

The trust is acutely demonstrated by one member of the company lying face down on the ground with eyes shut while the others pick him up off the ground, toss him in the air and catch him.

The professional actors lead and often join in the improvisation, lending a different dimension to what otherwise might be ordinary classroom activities.

Last summer Richard Kelton and Sean Griffin worked with the students. Sean was with the company for most of the summer, appearing through the courtesy of Actors Equity. He has had numerous roles in television and on stage and is currently appearing at the Long Wharf in New Haven, Conn. The Long Wharf is considered the leading repertoire company in the United States.

Richard appeared at the Ice House last summer for one week when he and Sean teamed up for "The Odd Couple." Richard received his actor's training at the University of Kansas where he met Al. Richard has appeared in a dozen television shows, including "The Waltons," "The Bold Ones," "Mission Impossible," and "Gunsmoke."

Most recently Richard had roles in John Wayne's movie, "McQ" and with Will Greer, of "The Waltons" fame in a new film.

Why should a professional actor spend a summer at a relatively unknown theatre in the Midwest?

"I wanted to work with Al, it's as simple as that. The kids learn a lot about theatre here. Not just acting, but rehearsals, movement and set designing and building. I thought it might be good experience since I may want to work with college kids some day," Sean said.

Both men obviously had the respect of the students although their teaching experience had been limited.

Sean thought of a unique teaching situation when he was cast in the lead of "Butterflies Are Free." The play centers around a young blind man who moves away from his parents in an effort to discover a "normal" life. The play involves his struggle with his parents and with his sighted girl friend.

Sean arranged for himself and Teresa Williams who played opposite him in "Butterflies" to visit Mr. and Mrs. Ben Ely. Mr. Ely is a Hannibal attorney and has been blind since 1953.

The Elys worked with Teresa and Sean in discovering how a blind person and those close to him react to every day situations. The Elys having been to every play presented by the Ice House since it opened, were eager to assist.

"You want to lead a normal life and have independence of motion by not having to have someone help you all the time," Mr. Ely explained to Sean.

Sean took this advice and practiced "Butterflies" blindfolded.

"You have to feel as though you actually are blind and you must convey this to the audience so they too believe you are blind," Sean said.

A sense of direction and remembering exactly where things were located were Sean's two big problems. While blindfolded he fell off the stage one rehearsal, but this too helped him understand the feelings and problems of a blind person.

"During the play I never focused on anything. I tried not to blink too and by the end of the show my eyes were bloodshot."

Sean also observed that Mr. Ely moved calmly and felt his way with his feet which resulted in scuffed shoes. These minor things, like the shoes and how Mr. Ely lit his pipe and turned his head slightly to pick up sounds and echoes, helped Sean's role be more convincing.

Prior to the opening of "Butterflies", Sean took the Elys on stage.

"I like to 'see' how the set is arranged so I have a mental picture of what's going on," Mr. Ely said. Mrs. Ely also reads the play which is a common practice either at the Ice House or the Muni in St. Louis.

"I prefer stage plays over movies because the dialogue is much better and the scenery doesn't change as often. It's like the difference between a radio and television announcer at a ball game. The radio announcer offers much more description of what is going on. Whenever I go to Busch Stadium in St. Louis I always take a radio along to help with the description," Mr. Ely explained.

Mr. Ely's help to Sean filtered down to the other students too.

"The concentration and total mental and physical commitment while on stage really impressed me. I've learned more from watching him than anything else," said Teresa.

"I never worried about dropping a line or not being able to pick a line up. Working with professional people in a professional way gives you a sense of security."

This summer students again will be working to obtain that security. Jim Severns will be directing the Ice House and has planned a similar program as previous years. Although the plays have not been selected, the bill most likely will include a melodrama, something about Hannibal and Mark Twain and perhaps a musical. The Ice House is scheduled to open July 2. But more important than which plays are selected, 20 or so young student actors will have a chance to participate in a genuine repertoire experience.

The stage was set for excitement, expectation and fun. The word of the week was "Beat Warrensburg!" The time—Homecoming. □ As students bustled by, preoccupied with grades, football and the various plights of student life, one man stood still to watch the show. Few noticed his presence, his air of confidence and satisfaction as he surveyed the busy scene around him. Tailored suit, conservative hairstyle—could pass for the average professor—nothing special. □ On the contrary, he was indeed special. The man was Emil A. McNeely, 1940 NMSU graduate, and today, one of the most successful businessmen in the country. McNeely, once a "struggling student" at Northeast, a "farmboy at heart," as he admits, now enjoys a somewhat easier and definitely more profitable life as President of the Wickes Corporation, an international firm specializing in shelter and home products. □ This was a special time for McNeely, for at this Homecoming 1973, he would join his mother, who is a 1913 graduate of NMSU—and eight others from the 1913 class, in some fond remembrances of when the electric light was still a thing of the future, and teachers were paid a whopping $1.33 a day! □ Born in Pattonsburg, Missouri in 1918, McNeely attended public school in Kirksville, followed with a degree from NMSU, and post-graduate work at Rockhurst in Kansas City, and Northwestern University in Chicago. After spending more than 20 years in various progressive positions with Montgomery Ward & Co. in Chicago, McNeely joined the Wickes Corporation in 1964 as Director of Marketing. The following year he was named Senior Vice President, and in May 1969 was named President of the Corporation. □ When McNeely joined Wickes in 1964, the fiscal year closed at $194 million. The 1973 fiscal year yielded over $1 billion—a figure McNeely plans to double within five years. □ Headquartered in San Diego, California, the Wickes Corporation is a rapidly growing "integrated marketing company" specializing in shelter products. Most notably, building supply centers, furniture warehouses and mobile homes, are recent additions to the diversified interests of the Corporation.

McNeely credits much of his success to the late J. C. Penney, whom he met on the street in Hamilton, Mo. McNeely was a newspaper boy at the time and Penney stopped to ask him directions—an encounter which sparked a longstanding and mutually beneficial relationship until Penney's recent death.

With an average workday of 16 hours, McNeely finds time to serve as a director of the Transamerica Corporation, the Federal-Mogul Corporation and several other national groups. His keen concern in social problems also brings him the responsibility of serving as a member of the Advisory Committee of the League of Women Voters, a national associate of the Boy's Clubs of America, as well as a director of the San Diego YMCA.

How does he find the time? McNeely says the key to his life is "hard work." "As a youngster, I never expected to do anything except work pretty hard. I enjoy it." As a father of four, and an internationally successful businessman, he certainly came a long way from his days as a student at NMSU, and a life as a Missouri "country boy."

And so, with his success well established, McNeely returned October 19 and 20 to host the 1913 class reunion and dinner, and speak at the homecoming luncheon on Saturday the 20th.

Gathered at the Friday evening dinner were nine members from the 1913 class—perhaps a little skeptical of the "new generation," perhaps a little reluctant to admit their necessary reliance on modern technology. But certainly all nine were proud of the rapid expansion of NMSU from a faculty of six to today's faculty of 300.

When McNeely's mother, Viola (Vogel) was a coed at NMSU, the first world war was threatening the Continent, Rasputin was making history as the "mad monk," and hitching posts began to disappear as fourlegged beasts gave way to four-wheeled beasts.

Faint smiles of recollection, and for some an embarrassed blush, appeared on the faces of McNeely's audience as he recalled for them the year 1913—when they exited from the student stage to take their parts in the role of life.

That year, the Indianapolis 500 was won at the incredible speed of 75 m.p.h.! Folk songs were commemorating the recent disaster of the Titanic, a murder in Chillicothe was solved by a relatively new technique called "fingerprinting," and NMSU students played a Halloween prank by placing a cow atop the bank building and turning over every outhouse in town.

Only 40,000 persons graduated from U.S. Colleges that year—9000 of them women. In Kirksville, Dr. John Kirk, president of NMSU (then called the Normal School), announced that because of the newly-installed lighting system, the library would remain open until 9:30 p.m.! Attendance in that Winter term was over 700, and faculty had grown from 14 (just twelve years earlier) to 57.

1913 was a difficult year for anyone graduating from college. The United States was on the brink of entering a world war. For many in that class, the years that followed would bring thousands of war casualties, a seemingly unconquerable flu epidemic and two severe economic depressions. Prohibition was in effect, and the underworld reigned its legions in terror. Lenin and Mussolini were commanding public attention across the seas, while here the Teapot Dome (Watergate of yesterday) was shattering the American image.

But as McNeely related these historic tragedies, his audience did not show bitterness or regret. For they also remembered the good—the triumphant return from war, the establishment of the League of Nations, Lindbergh, radio, Babe Ruth, and Will Rogers. In the past 60 years, the class of 1913 witnessed the most rapid growth ever recorded. Automobiles became a status symbol of even the poorer families, air travel enabled the fastest communication ever, television came on the scene, and most of the world's major diseases were licked.

If the world is indeed a stage, and we are playing out a tragedy, the class of 1913 would not agree. As one 1913 class member, Wayne Fuller, put it, "Along with the physical infirmities of age, we enjoy many advantages to which younger people may look forward. One is a long accumulation of rich memories. Even events that seemed inconsequential or unpleasant at the time are savored in retrospect. We have arrived at the wisdom that struggle and adversity are a part of life, without which there can be no development, accomplishment and joy."

With more than 80 years behind them, the 1913 class can well afford to philosophize about life. Homecoming 1973 held a special remembrance for each of them. But it also held excitement for the new generation of students that are following in the footsteps of the 1913 alumni, in trying to glean the best education and the widest knowledge during their years at NMSU.

McNeely, an alumnus NMSU is proud to claim, was most appropriately invited to present the Homecoming luncheon address. The memories of the past well behind him, McNeely chose to look to the accomplishments of the present and future. Among the distinguished luncheon guests were past Presidents Walter Ryle and Eli Mittler.

McNeely, who devotes much time to youth and public education, expressed his concern over increasing specialization in the modern educational institutions. NMSU has always emphasized a liberal arts education, and it was because of this unique emphasis, says McNeely, that the University achieved "a national reputation of excellence in the education of teachers."

"Those of you, young and old, who have competence and mastery and a range of skills and knowledge, have and can and will continue to make this an increasingly better world."

All this effectiveness coming from a small college in Kirksville, Mo.? McNeely is proof of it. For all the benefits of the fine arts the University has brought to Kirksville, the community has provided a peaceful Midwestern atmosphere not to be found on any metropolitan campus.

McNeely is convinced "that a Midwest exposure provides a basic sense of equilibrium, and stimulates curiosity and interest in new ideas, leavened with a healthy respect for the verities of the past."

With a 1974 enrollment of 6000, NMSU can claim its success. In a time of crises and economic confusion, education still remains a stable force in directing youth in the course of life, at least it does in Kirksville.

McNeely may have recalled many past successes and accomplishments, but he also knows that the current generation will bring their own successes and accomplishments into an increasingly complex and technocratic world. McNeely is living proof of that fact as he stands successful and confident before his audience, some of whom remember him as a "bright young student with a love for playing pranks"—and some who hope to befriend him as their "J. C. Penney."

To paraphrase a statement President McClain recently made to the entering NMSU class, "We want you to possess the quiet spirit of confidence and competence as you exit off the stage we have prepared for you." Confidence and competence—Mr. McNeely may take his bows.

Gene Bartow

Editor's Note: Since this feature was sent to the printers, Gene Bartow was appointed basketball coach at the University of Illinois in Champaign-Urbana.

Gene Bartow thinks handball is a good release from the never-ceasing tensions of college coaching.

So whenever the Memphis State University basketball mentor can spare the time, he and an assistant, Leroy Hunt, head for a handball court on campus.

What's more, the NMSU alumnus approaches his handball workouts with the same fervor and enthusiasm he tackles the job of directing the Tiger fortunes.

Bartow, who led the Tigers to the 1972 NCAA Finals, is seeing a childhood dream fulfilled . . . coaching a major college quintet.

Almost 500 games after he directed a small Greentop High School five as a 1952 senior at NMSU, the Browning native was given the awesome task of designing a sure-fire blueprint to topple college basketball's giant, UCLA.

He didn't find the correct formula for taming John Wooden's Californians, but his peers, nevertheless, chose him as the 1972-73 Collegiate Coach of the Year.

"I undoubtedly made a name for myself with the great defensive job we did on Bill Walton," grinned Bartow. He was being facetious, because Walton, the UCLA superstar, had enjoyed his greatest game ever with 44 points against the Tigers.

BARTOW remembers a humorous incident while reminiscing about his college days and early coaching experiences.

"But despite the loss to a great John Wooden club, the highlight of my career had to be our team advancing to the NCAA championship battle," continues the bespectacled skipper, who could easily be mistaken for a college dean or chancellor.

What provided his impetus to achieve success (an overall record of 347-150 in 18 full seasons) and expedite his journey from Greentop to the NCAA finale at St. Louis? Was it a life-long dream or goal, or a combination of both elements?

Bartow, an admirer of the Norman Vincent Peale concept of positive thinking, expounded on his philosophy last August when he stepped to the rostrum to deliver a commencement address at his alma mater.

"Successful people learn to expect a miracle," he told the NMSU summer graduating class. "After developing a plan, they review it, then ask themselves the imperative question—'Am I going in the right direction?' They possess a strong inner drive and self-discipline."

The amiable skipper remembers vividly when he decided coaching would be his profession.

"I must've been in the fifth or sixth grade at Browning," he responds. "Ray DeGreef, the coach at that time, let me hang around the gym. As a matter of fact, he took a great deal of interest in me."

Bartow speaks with pride about Browning's 1947-48 high school team. He and his teammates lost only once in 38 games, a one-pointer to Kirksville, he recalls.

The following autumn, he enrolled at NMSU, and was a member of the squad. "However, I wasn't strong enough to play varsity ball, especially at that time when the Bulldogs had a great team that included Harry Gallatin (former professional player and coach)."

Bartow speaks fondly of the friends he made in Kirksville. He still visits Gallatin and his family in Edwardsville, Ill.

A brother, Gale, received his undergraduate and Master's degree from NMSU. He is currently superintendent of schools at Blue Springs. Another brother, Russell, is president of a Los Angeles clothing store. A sister, Lola, is married to a physician.

While completing his physical education course work at NMSU, he was asked to fill the Greentop coaching vacancy. His cagers finished 16-6 that year.

One month after graduation, Bartow was off to military service—a two-year Army hitch at Ft. Bliss, Tex. where he performed on the basketball team.

THE NMSU ALUMNUS stresses one of his main points in last summer's commencement address to the University graduating class. He told his audience successful people learn to expect a miracle, and constantly review their goals.

WHEN THERE IS A CONTEST to be played (left), the day is just starting for Bartow at 5:30 p.m. Next on the docket is a pre-game meeting with Assistant Coaches Leroy Hunt and Wayne Yates.

THE TIGER SKIPPER uses a break in action to point out mistakes by his players.

BARTOW and NMSU Coach Willard Sims discuss the outlook for their teams.

BARTOW AND HIS AIDES ponder over strategy before the second half tip-off of the Tiger encounter with Vanderbilt.

He returned to civilian life and directed the Shelbina High School quintet for one season to a glittering 30-6 record and a berth in the state tourney.

Then, he went to St. Charles for an impressive four-year tenure that included a 1957 Missouri prep championship, the highlight of his prep tenure, plus three other trips to the state tournament. Altogether, his high school aggregations chalked up a 145-49 record.

Bartow was hired as an assistant at University of California (Santa Barbara) in 1958, working under Art Gallon. The West Coast school nabbed the California Collegiate Athletic Conference title both years the NMSU alumnus worked there.

MIAA Conference opponent Central Missouri State hired Bartow in 1961. In his first head coaching job on the collegiate level, he directed the Mules to an overall mark of 47-21 and three third places in the league.

But Bartow realized more collegiate success at his next post, Valparaiso (Ind.) University. His Valpo teams rolled up 93 triumphs and only 69 setbacks. Three times, they were picked for the NCAA College Division playoffs, and advanced once to the national quarter-finals at Evansville, Ind.

Bartow's only losing season as a high school or college head coach was in 1967-68 at Valpo. That edition sported a sub-par 11-15 slate.

His achievements at the Indiana school didn't go unnoticed. Memphis State had usually enjoyed a rich tradition on the hardwood. However, the Bengals had fallen on hard times, capturing only 20 of 76 games in a three-year stretch and sinking to the Missouri Valley basement. Bartow was tapped in March, 1970 for the challenging task of rekindling fortunes at the Tennessee school.

Memphis' 1970-71 quintet was 18-8, followed by a 21-7 ledger and conference co-championship the next winter. The Bengals were tapped for the National Invitational Tournament in New York City after losing an NCAA playoff spot to loop co-titlist Louisville. They dropped a first-round tournament verdict to Oral Roberts.

Then, came the national runnerup squad that was bumped just six times in 30 trips to the court.

When Bartow hasn't been swamped with the daily routine of preparing his Tigers for combat during the regular academic year, he has hurriedly packed his bags and flown to places like San Juan Puerto or Munich, Germany.

He guided the Puerto Rican National team to a runnerup finish in the 1971 Pan American Games. A year later, he coached the same group to fifth place among 16 entrants at the Olympics in Munich.

Bartow hasn't merely been on the dead run to clinics and special assignments. He took a group of U.S. College All-Stars last summer on an eight-game tour of the People's Republic of China. The Americans completed the junket with a spotless record.

"We were treated fabulously on a highly interested trip," Bartow remarks. "And the Chinese weren't bad players, either. In fact, they tripped Spain and France. One of their primary goals is making the sport big in their country and getting in the Olympic Games. They are proud of a slogan—friendship, first . . . competition, second."

Bartow says he didn't witness the poverty that is supposed to exist in the People's Republic. The men and women, comprising one-fourth of the world's population, appeared to be happy wherever the visitors traveled.

"But I experienced problems with their food and water," he chuckled. "I lost 15 pounds while we were there."

What are Bartow's future plans? "I want to continue coaching five to eight more years," he replied between a steady barrage of phone calls from the news media and friends, wanting tickets for an upcoming game.

"Perhaps, I will eventually seek a position in athletic administration at the college or professional level."

Bartow is quick to mention a number of former basketball teachers who helped mold his development as a coach.

"I learned a lot from Boyd King, former NMSU mentor, as well as John Bennington and Blair Gullion," he points out.

Bennington was at St. Louis University and Gullion guided Washington University when Bartow was working toward his Master's degree at the St. Louis institution. They are now deceased.

Are players more proficient in the rudiments of the hardwood sport than 20 years ago?

"Yes, coaching is better, and today's athletes are stronger and taller," he maintains. "And they will continue to improve."

The backbone of Bartow's outstanding 1972-73 aggregation is gone. Guard Larry Finch and frontliners Ronnie Robinson and Larry Kenon, who furnished much of the firepower, are now in the professional ranks.

Bartow has made some changes. He has gone to a three-guard offensive system and a basic zone press defense.

"Although we lost talented personnel, I'm confident our basketball program will remain sound in the future," he contends. "Don't be surprised to see us in the NCAA again."

That's some more of his positive thinking coming through in strong fashion.

NORTHEAST MISSOURI STATE UNIVERSITY

McKinney Center Houses PR Division

Dedication services for the Robert L. McKinney Center were held in the remodeled building on December 19, 1973 with a large crowd of relatives, faculty and friends in attendance.

The McKinney Center is named in honor of the late Colonel Robert L. McKinney, Assistant to the President and Head of the Division of Public Relations at NMSU for many years. Col. McKinney died suddenly on January 29, 1973 while in Jefferson City on business.

President Emeritus Walter H. Ryle was the principal speaker at the ceremonies presided over by President Charles J. McClain. Board of Regents President Mary Alice Bunney of Shelbyville presented the family framed copies of a resolution passed by the Board of Regents honoring Col. McKinney.

The McKinney Center, formerly the west half of the old Practical Arts Building, houses the Division of Public Relations, including the Alumni, Public Information, Publications, Sports Information offices and the campus mail-room.

Regents Award Natatorium Contracts

Contracts have been awarded by the Board of Regents for the construction of a $1,200,000 natatorium to be constructed at the University. Contracts were signed with the Reed Construction Co. of Kirksville at the April meeting of the Regents.

Architects of the firm of Ittner & Bowersox Inc. of St. Louis, said they expect the project to be completed sometime during the fall of 1975. The natatorium, to be constructed immediately south of the Pershing Building, is designed for instructional, recreational and competitive swimming.

Board President Mrs. Mary Alice Bunney of Shelbyville noted that the natatorium had been in planning stages for more than 18 months and "I'm happy to see that it is becoming a reality. Much of the credit for the natatorium, though, must go to the late James F. Jae who was responsible for getting the project moving when he was a member of the Board."

Mr. Jae was a member of the NMSU Board of Regents until his death last year. He had been vice president and general manager of Radio Station KHMO in Hannibal.

Regent William Quinn of Maywood noted the quality of the pool saying that it would be an excellent facility which has long been needed by the University for recreational purposes as well as filling an instructional need for the Health and Physical Education Division.

Monterrey Scene of 9th Summer Workshop

Northeast Missouri State University, in conjunction with the Instituto Tecnológico y de Estudios Superiores de Monterrey, again is offering a unique travel and study opportunity to a select group of high school, undergraduate, and graduate students for the summer of 1974. The ninth annual session begins on June 22 and ends August 9.

Participating students will have three options as they may participate in the twelve day travel workshop and earn two semester hours of graduate or undergraduate credit, or they may elect to participate in both the workshop and the six week summer session at "TEC", where they will earn an additional six semester hours. High school students may earn one high school unit. And, finally, they may elect to spend only the six weeks at "TEC" and earn six semester hours or one high school unit.

Since its inception in 1965, the program has been under the direction of Walter H. Ryle IV, Associate Professor of History, and Director of Latin American Studies.

The Mexican Summer Session and Travel Workshop can best be described as a seminar in the Mexican way of life, designed to promote international understanding and good will, according to Ryle. Hundreds of students throughout the United States will mix pleasure and studies while attending summer school in Mexico. There will be over 3,000 Mexican students enrolled at TEC while NMSU students are on the campus. "Our students are fortunate to be able to study in a wholesome atmosphere where they meet Mexican students of their age from all over the Republic and from similar backgrounds," Ryle said.

"The University hopes to promote and sustain an interest in Spanish and Latin American Studies as well as sustain an interest in continuing education on the part of the greater community served by this University through the program," Ryle said.

Those interested in any of the options for themselves or their families should contact Mr. Ryle for this year or future years.

March of Dimes Sets Up Scholarship

The Adair County March of Dimes has established a nursing scholarship at NMSU for sophomore, junior and senior nursing students. The March of Dimes made an initial grant to NMSU for $1,000 to maintain the scholarship which will be in the amount of the in-state fees for an academic year.

The scholarship will be awarded to a high school graduate in Adair County and may be renewable, as determined by the selection committee. The student who receives the scholarship must have demonstrated financial need and must have maintained at least a 2.50 grade point average.

A large share of the money used for the scholarship was raised in the March of Dimes Marathon Dance sponsored last spring by the Adair County Teenage March of Dimes and the NMSU Circle K Club.

Mrs. Funk Appointed Regent to Replace Judge Reinhard

Mrs. Caroline Funk of Lancaster has been appointed to the Board of Regents of Northeast Missouri State University by Gov. Christopher S. Bond. The appointment was made on January 15, and was confirmed by the Missouri Senate during the current session of the Legislature.

Mrs. Funk is to replace Judge James R. Reinhard of Hannibal who resigned from the Board last November 1, because of his pressing duties as judge of the Tenth Judicial Circuit. Mrs. Funk is to serve out the remainder of Reinhard's six-year term which expires January 1, 1977. She is a democrat.

Mrs. Funk was graduated in 1952 from Lindenwood College in St. Charles with a Bachelor of Music Education. She also has done additional work at the University of Missouri-Columbia and Washington University.

After her marriage she and her husband, Leo, moved to Lancaster where he served for one year as superintendent of the Lancaster public schools. Mr. Funk is President of the Schuyler County State Bank and is also engaged in farming.

Mrs. Funk serves as a member and secretary of the Board of Directors of the Bank. Mr. Funk is a graduate of the University of Missouri-Columbia with a degree in educational administration.

Mrs. Funk is a member of numerous organizations including the Lancaster United Methodist Church and the P.E.O. Sisterhood. She also is a lay delegate for the Lancaster Charge to the Missouri East Conference of the United Methodist Church.

The Funks have two children, Charles, 19, and Gretchen, 17.

Judge James R. Reinhard, said in his letter of resignation to Gov. Christopher Bond: "I find that I do not have the time to fulfill my obligation as a member of the Board of Regents."

Reinhard said he was proud to have been a member of the Board for almost nine years. "I have witnessed the graduation of 9,977 students. For almost six years, I served as president of the Board and had the privilege of signing on behalf of the Board, 6,918 degrees."

Reinhard also said that the University is in good hands and its future bright.

Reinhard is a native of Pollock, Mo. He attended NMSU from 1947-1950. He received his bachelor of arts degree from the University of Missouri-Columbia in 1951 and the LL.B degree from the University of Missouri-Columbia in 1953.

He served two terms as prosecuting attorney of Monroe County. He was an honorary Colonel on the staff of Gov. John M. Dalton and Gov. Warren E. Hearnes.

He was appointed by Gov. Dalton as a member of the Board in 1965 and re-appointed by Gov. Hearnes in 1971. He served as president of the Board from 1967 through February 13, 1973.

Newsweek Reviews Goeke Performance

Leo Goeke, a 1957 graduate of NMSU, recently received an excellent review in "Newsweek" magazine for his performance in the production, "The Trojans".

Goeke portrayed the part of the Phrygian sailor which "Newsweek" called "outstanding".

The new production which was mounted by the Metropolitan Opera Company during the first part of November marked the conducting debut at the Met of its new musical director Rafael Kubelik. The native Czechoslovakian conductor had previously conducted the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at Covent Garden London and at LaScala in Milan.

Goeke holds the Bachelor's degree in music education-voice from NMSU.

Basil Brewer Celebrates 90th

Basil Brewer of 89 Hawthorn St., New Bedford, Mass., celebrated his 90th birthday in 1973 at his summer home in Chatham, Mass. Fifty former co-workers and friends attended a luncheon in observance of the occasion. Formerly publisher of The New Bedford Standard-Times and the Cape Cod Standard-Times, Mr. Brewer wrote the NMSU school song "Old Missou" while a student at the then Normal School. In past years he has made many appearances in Kirksville and presented the commencement address when Brewer Hall was dedicated in his honor. Mr. Brewer has received numerous awards for his newspaper articles, many of which have been presented to the Missouri Historical Society at Columbia.

How do you win a trip to Europe? There are various ways, but Lt. Dempsey D. Gottschalk of Richmond, Mo., discovered a unique way. During the month of June, 1973 he enlisted nine men in the Missouri National Guard. Dempsey is the Commander of Battery A, 1st Battalion, 129th Field Artillery in Albany. The Adjutant General of Missouri, Major General Charles M. Kiefner, informed all Army National Guard unit commanders that the company, detachment, or battery commander whose unit enlisted the most personnel during the month of June would be aide-de-camp to him on a trip to Germany to observe the Missouri Air National Guard's participation in "Operation Creek Party." The 139th Air Refueling Group at St. Joseph deploys four tankers and 80 guardsmen to Frankfurt, Germany, four times a year for a two-week period to air refuel USAF tactical fighter aircraft stationed in Europe. This duty is rotated with six other Air National Guard Air Refueling Groups in the U.S. and is called "Operation Creek Party." General Kiefner and Lt. Gottschalk departed Rosecrans Field in St. Joseph on July 20 and returned July 29. Lt. Gottschalk began his military career by enlisting in the
