Severns, professor of drama, and Bruce Brockman, instructor in drama, will be interviewed at 9 a.m. Tuesday. A feature story about the 12th year of NMSU's theatre program in Hannibal is inside.

Working with professionals

Students act the summer away

"Opening night's always exciting. It's never old hat. The first time before a full audience is always exciting," said Costume Mistress Tracy Waldeck, a senior theatre major of NMSU in her third year with the Hannibal Ice House Theatre.

Located at the foot of Hill Street in Hannibal, the summer theater is jointly sponsored by Northeast Missouri State University, the Hannibal Foundation and the Hannibal Chamber of Commerce with assistance from the Missouri Council on the Arts.

Both students and professional actors make up the cast of the Ice House Company, now in its twelfth season.

Theatre majors are not the only ones who audition for parts at the Ice House. Elizabeth Clark, for example, is a senior law enforcement major at NMSU. For "Ding Dong," the season's first play, she was "a German woman running after the little French fellow, Vatelín," played by Michael Collins, junior theatre major at NMSU.

Clark said, "I'm nervous for several reasons. It's my first role in another town. In Kirksville everyone was a student. Here, there are professionals playing major roles, and you feel self-conscious because you feel the audience can tell the difference."

During the hectic hours that precede opening night there are various ways to keep actors from getting too keyed up. Technical Director Bruce Brockman, who is also instructor of drama at NMSU, lightens things up while working with comments such as "See Bruce hammer a nail with a pliers. See Bruce break his finger."

Plays this season, which runs from July 2 through Aug. 12, include "Ding Dong," last week's comedy by George Feydau; "The Tender Trap," a comedy by Max Shulman and Robert Paul Smith that runs July 10-15; "Death of a Salesman," a tragedy by Arthur Miller, July 12-22; "Opal's Baby," a comedy by John Patrick, July 24-31; "The Passion of Dracula," a drama by Bob Hall and David Richmond, Aug. 2-5, 7-12; and "House at Pooh Corner," a children's theater by A. A. Milne, adapted by Bettye Knapp, with Saturday matinees July 14, 21, 28, Aug. 4 and 11.

Co-founders for the NMSU program in Hannibal are Dr. James G. Severns, professor of dramatics, and Alfred H. Srnka, assistant professor of speech. This summer Severns is managing director of the theater, while Srnka is a guest director.

NMSU students earn nine hours of theatre credit, and many receive scholarships. They arrange for their own living accommodations while in Hannibal. Tryouts are held in the spring.

The Theatre itself is very old. It was established in 1854 as the first ice house west of the Mississippi, manufacturing ice in 300-pound cakes. In 1968 it was converted into the Ice House Theatre. So far it has survived a fire and several floods.

Severns said, "This ice house is excellent for a summer theater in some ways. There's lots of storage space, high ceilings and a large prop building room (shop). The building is a colorful old building. It's an ideal location, just between the historic district and the Mississippi River. I happen to like it."

Student actors and actresses work together as clean-up crews, artists, ushers, seamstresses and prop builders, to mention a few. Everybody does a little bit of everything.

The hours are long. The company frequently comes to work at 9:30 a.m., takes an hour off for lunch, works until dinner, breaks for two hours, then returns for more rehearsing until 10 or 11 p.m. "It's a rough schedule, but you're around people you like, so it goes a lot faster," said Kurt Henke, junior theatre major at NMSU.

The company rehearses the next week's show during the day and performs the current play at night.

All of the hours of dedication seem worthwhile when that line of people starts to form outside the ticket window. Many are regulars to the Ice House and gladly pay $2.75 or $3.75 for an evening's entertainment.

"Curtains in one minute, everyone!" shouts Severns over the crowd in the lobby. "Curtain time!"
