President's comments

An awareness of our roots and origins in the past is the foundation on which we base our sense of identity in the present and our direction for the future.

As we look forward to the future, we also pause and reflect on the past . . . More important and lasting than any new construction project or innovative curriculum is the spirit of learning begun here by Joseph Baldwin in 1867 and perpetuated by our students and alumni for over a century. Unfortunately, pressures to sweep away vital elements of our heritage in the name of "progress" seem to grow steadily stronger.

One constant theme throughout the University's history has been our faith in the educational process and our commitment to its advancement. I know you join me in reaffirming this commitment to the great work which began long ago, but which remains unfinished.

Best Personal Regards

Editors' Note

The memory of a college education remains with you throughout the years after graduation. The person who became a spouse and the subjects you hated from the first day of the course stick with you for the rest of your lives. But the hangouts bring back the fondest memories. Perhaps its because the restaurant sold the first cup of coffee in the morning and caused the first realization that, "Yes, it is morning and I am not in bed and I am awake and I am supposed to be in class." Perhaps it is because the bar sold the last bottle of beer in the evening before you collapsed into bed. Either way, trying to remember the coffee shops and bars bring back funnier moments than classes do anyway. So to help you remember the most popular places around NMSU, we have a story on page 17 concerning the social settings in past years. And, although, we tried to cover the best spots with complete accuracy, we may have missed a few. If we have, write us.

If you did like to quaff a brew now and then, and if you liked to quaff one before you reached the legal age, you may recall the ever-present fear that a man in uniform might walk up and ask your age. What if a woman in a uniform walked up to you? You shouldn't have worried. It was only this year that a woman donned the uniform of the Missouri State Police. That woman is Pat Wright, a NMSU graduate. Her story starts on page 28.

The University has begun a development campaign. After a careful study of the alternatives that could be used to maintain the standards of NMSU, it was decided that a development campaign would be the best avenue to use. In the past several months, studies have been undertaken to decide goals and meetings arranged to implement tactics to reach the goals. A description of the entire campaign, its history and its plans starts on page 24.

The future of higher education was chosen by Harold Hodgkinson for the topic of the Baldwin Lecture. Excerpts from his speech begin on page 30.

Letters

(The following is a reprint of an exchange of letters concerning our spring issue's legislative report.)

Dear President McClain:

If St. Charles County is in the 26th Senatorial District, what area do I represent? I truly appreciate your bringing this matter to my attention. Last year I campaigned for five months in St. Charles County. I campaigned in Wentzville, O'Fallon, West Alton, St. Charles, St. Peters, Cottleville, Augusta, Schlursberg, St. Paul, Flint Hill, Kaplan, and Harvester.

I attended every church picnic and sausage supper from June 1 to October 31. I really did work hard, and then I only won the election by 157 votes out of 40,000.

I never really did understand why, after all that work, I only won by a narrow margin. I was campaigning in the 26th district instead of the 2nd, and I sincerely appreciate "Nemoscope" bringing this tragic error to my attention. You can be assured that I will never believe the Secretary of the State again as long as I live.

Sincerely,

Senator J. H. Frappier
The senator from somewhere

Dear Senator Frappier:

My sincere apologies to you for the error in the listing of your district in the NEMOSCOPE.

Joe, I am grateful that you have a good sense of humor. Your letter made my day even though I am sorry for the error.

I am sure the good people of St. Charles County know the name of their State Senator, and I hope that some of them take the time to express appreciation for your support of education.

I look forward to our next visit.

Best personal regards,

Charles J. McClain
President

Dear Sir:

Thank you very much for the copy of the NEMOSCOPE. It is a very nice magazine, and reading thru the pages filled me with nostalgia. For it was here midst the halls of education I met and made many friends, and also met my wonderful wife, Marion Johnson.

I graduated in August, 1937 and had the honor of being president of the Senior class. I have always had a soft place in my heart for my old college, and we have visited there quite often to relive the college days. The memories of all the good things of college life seem to again swirl thru the memories of my mind.

I knew Arnold Embree very well, but had lost track of him as the years passed. So many of the old friends are gone, lost in the mists of time, and I must admit it is interesting to speculate on what life has given them, as time went by.

I was deeply saddened to read of the death of my childhood close friend Frank Paxson. Such is the way of life. Wouldn't it be wonderful if we could stay near our college friends as time goes by. At least we can harbor fond memories. This I do.

Again thanks for the Nemoscope.

With fond memories,

Wm. J. Eagle

Specialist degree program receives NCA accreditation

by Maggie Jarrett

Northeast Missouri State University has been fully accredited at all levels of instruction including a new sixth-year specialist program by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. Announcement of the accreditation was made by University President Charles J. McClain.

"Northeast has always been known for its quality and excellence, and we are extremely pleased by the continued confidence expressed by the North Central Association," McClain said. "We are especially delighted with the approval of the Specialist Degree program which will allow us to serve the needs of our constituency in the field of education administration. I congratulate the faculty and staff, who join me in thanking the visitation committee, and Dr. R. Dale Dick, Dean of the School of Graduate Studies at the University of Wisconsin, who chaired the committee."

The full accreditation of all programs comes to the University following a lengthy period of self-study and evaluation by the entire University community prior to the April visit of the accreditation team.

The Specialist Degree program in education administration is scheduled to begin in the 1975 Fall Semester. It is a high level of study beyond the master's degree but does not have the heavy emphasis on research and additional course work required for the doctoral degree. For the past three years the program has been in operation at Northeast in cooperation with the University of Missouri; the first group of six graduates will complete the specialist degree, awarded by the University of Missouri, in December. The second group of graduates, and those to follow, will receive the degree from Northeast.

In citing Northeast's major strengths, the North Central team included: a capable and promising administrative staff, a well-qualified and dedicated faculty, excellent community relations, and excellent relationships between students and faculty, characterized by concern and warmth. The visiting team recommended, and the association complied, that Northeast by placed on a ten-year review schedule, the maximum period the association grants before requiring reaccreditation.

NMSU gets grant for research

With the help of funds awarded recently by the National Science Foundation, undergraduate students will have an opportunity to gain experience in electrochemistry.

Dr. Dean A. Rosebery, head of the Science Division, was notified recently that the University will receive $8,700 from the National Science Foundation. This sum will be used to purchase scientific equipment needed to improve undergraduate instruction. The funds are part of a matching program whereby recipient institutions agree to match NSF funds by providing at least 50 per cent of the equipment costs.

Grants were awarded to 388 colleges, universities and two-year colleges out of 844 that submitted proposals.

Donald E. Walker, associate professor of chemistry at Northeast and director of the grant funds, said that the equipment to be purchased will be used primarily by undergraduate students in analytical and organic chemistry and biochemistry courses. He said that electrochemical equipment is used to analyze compounds by electrolysis, a process in which an electrical current is passed through a solution to produce changes in the composition of the solutions. One piece of equipment to be purchased, a Polarographic Analyzer, can be used to analyze trace substances in water. A Potentiostat/Galvanostat, also to be purchased with the funds, will be used to convert organic compounds into other compounds.

Administrators take new positions

by Maggie Jarrett

Dr. Ryle greets Mr. & Mrs. Nicoletti at reception

With the arrival of the new fall semester, several administrators will encounter their first academic year at NMSU in their new positions.

Dr. Lydia Inman, head of the division of home economics and acting dean of graduate studies since the retirement of Dr. Eli F. Mittler, was appointed to assume the position of graduate dean. Dean Inman arrived at the University in 1972 and holds a Ph.D. from the University of Minnesota.

Dr. Terry Smith joined the staff as Dean of Students and professor of political science on August 1. Dr. Smith received his Ph.D. from Michigan State University and taught in the department of political science at University of Central Arkansas before his arrival at NMSU. He replaced James Ritter, former dean of student affairs who moved to Columbia to work with the school district as their director of transportation. Ritter will also continue his education.

Kent A. Farnsworth was appointed to hold the position of director of admissions and registration. He succeeds Terry Taylor, former director of admissions, and James A. Snider, former director of registration. Taylor joined the staff of Congressman Jerry Litton to work as an administrative aide. Snider will attend the University of Missouri at Columbia to pursue a law degree.

Chris Raynes, a May graduate of the University of Missouri at Columbia, joined the staff as assistant to the dean of administration and general counsel.

At their July meeting, the Board of Regents passed a resolution thanking Pete Nicoletti for his "loyalty and dedication to the University" as its chief business office, and assistant professor of education from January 1, 1954 until his retirement on June 30. The resolution noted in part that "this Board and the entire University community are indebted to Pete Nicoletti for his contribution to the State of Missouri and to Northeast Missouri State University."

Mr. Fuller dies

Wayne Russell Fuller, 82, of 706 N. Baltimore, died recently in a Kirksville hospital where he had been a patient. He had been in failing health the past year, however, death was unexpected.

Mr. Fuller was instrumental in support for the University development campaign.

Mr. Fuller was reared in Kirksville, where he attended public schools and the Kirksville Normal School. He attended and graduated from Missouri University in Columbia.

Mr. Fuller served as a chemist and technical director of Pratt and Lambert Paint Company in Buffalo, N.Y. for 15 years. He then served as director of Industrial Research with the Guardsman Chemical Coatings Company in Grand Rapids, Mich. until his retirement in 1970 when he returned to Kirksville.

He was the author of "Understanding Paint" and served as the editor and major contributor to the book on "Coatings Technology."

Mr. Fuller served with the United States Army in France during World War I.

He served as president of the Kirksville Chamber of Commerce and chairman of the Housing Authority. He had served on the boards of the American Red Cross and the Salvation Army. He was a member of the Kirksville Rotary Club.

Surviving is his wife, Elizabeth K. Uhe Fuller, '13, and two half sisters, Mrs. Lena Fuller Pollard '06 of Phoenix, Arizona, and Mrs. Nelle Fuller Dessert '07, Mosinee, Wisconsin.

Barnes poems in Indian anthology

Eleven poems by Dr. Jim Barnes, assistant professor of comparative literature are included in Carriers of the Dream Wheel, a collection of poems by native American poets published recently by Harper & Row publishing company.

The book is the fifth in a series by Harper & Row that deals with the works of native Americans. It is illustrated by Wendy Rose, a noted Indian artist, and includes short biographies of the 15 poets whose works are included.

Barnes joined the NMSU faculty in 1970. Prior to coming to Kirksville he taught English, developmental reading and world literature at Northeastern State College, Tahlequah, Okla.

Mitchell's book gets favorable reviews

by Maggie Jarrett

"Dr. Mitchell's work is both a valuable addition to the field of Russian history and a welcome contribution to that informed public opinion which is the only sure basis for sound national policy," writes a reviewer in the January 25, 1975 issue of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat in reference to Dr. Donald Mitchell's book A History of Russian and Soviet Sea Power. Mitchell, professor of political science has received equally favorable reviews of his book in more than two dozen publications including The London Evening News, the World Affairs Report and the National Review.

Mitchell is the first American to compile such a history and the first author to present a complete history of the development of Russian seapower written in English. He begins his account with the story of Russia's first seamen and traces her naval history through World War II. The volume represents nearly 20 years of research.

"Dr. Mitchell presents a fascinating account of a navy whose heritage and traditions are vastly different from our own . . . thorough and excellently written, this book is well worth reading," writes Lt. Col. Donald P. Walen of the Naval War College in the October, 1974 issue of Military Review.

"This work may well be the standard English history of the Russian navy for some time to come," writes a reviewer in the October, 1974 issue of The Russian Review.

General Sir Ian Jacob writes in the March, 1975 issue of Books and Bookmen, "I strongly recommend Mitchell's book to everyone who wishes to understand what has been going on behind closed doors, and what the future may hold."

Although the major portion of the book is devoted to a traditional approach to naval history, Mitchell focuses on issues of immediate national security in the last three chapters: the threat of the Soviet fishing industry, her growing merchant marine fleet, her new amphibious and naval air capability and her naval presence in the Mediterranean.

Defending that, for lack of air power, the Soviets would "doubtless be defeated" in a battle with any major power in the Mediterranean, the author states that the Soviet naval threat to the United States lies in the "less dramatic but more difficult problems of NATO solidarity and of willingness within the U.S. to support a virile military policy."

The published edition is the sixth version of the book. The introduction was written by Admiral George W. Anderson, former chief of Naval Operations under President John F. Kennedy.

Mitchell credits many persons — from typists to four-star generals — for assistance in gathering material which was often written in French, German and Russian. He relied heavily on assistants, among them a 100 year-old former chief of staff for the White Russian Army.

Mitchell is currently working on a book concerning international economic development, its problems and promises. He is author of four books, a contributor to 12 books and the author of more than 100 magazine and newspaper articles, book reviews and government publications.

Natatorium construction continues

This spring the division of health and physical education will offer courses in swimming. Courses which will be held in the new natatorium scheduled to be completed near the beginning of the spring semester.

The natatorium will contain a six-lane Olympic-size pool with a one-meter diving board, a three-meter diving board, an electronic timing system hooked directly to a scoreboard, and seating capacity for approximately 250 spectators.

Besides this main area, the building will hold a physical therapy classroom, regular classrooms, faculty offices, and locker rooms. There will also be a sun deck on the south side of the building.

"The pool itself will have automatic filtration and temperature control systems," said Doug Winicker, campus planner. "Above the pool, there'll be exposed mechanical system. It will be a dynamic environment; colorful and stimulating."

The natatorium will attach to the Pershing Building by hallways on the first and second floors.

Alumnus enrolls NMSU's youngest students — his children, 2½ and 5

Henry Chok

Henrietta Mui Li, age 5, and Heinrich Khong Ee, age 2-1/2 may be the youngest students ever registered at Northeast. Their father, Khen Fong "Henry" Chok (B.A. '66), informally enrolled them in the University in May.

"I enjoyed the University and I want my children to share that feeling. I plan to have them complete their elementary and secondary education in Malaysia so they will absorb their native culture first and will not lose it during their years of study in the U.S.," Chok said during a recent visit to campus. Chok, his wife, Maria, and two children live in Kota Kinabalu, Sabah, Malaysia.

Chok studied economics and accounting for three years at NMSU under the sponsorship of the Macon Teachers Association. His mother, an inspector of schools in Malaysia, spent more than a year in Macon beginning in 1960 as a participant in an exchange program between her school system and Macon's. While at NMSU he was president of the International Club for one year and was active in the Wesley Foundation and People to People. After graduation from NMSU he did a year of graduate work in economics at the University of Missouri-Columbia where he met his wife who came to Missouri from the Philippines in a nursing exchange program.

Now he is manager of the Sabah branch of Borneo Development Corporation, a company that finances industrial and commercial projects. He is also owner of Promotions Incorporated, a public relations firm in Kota Kinabalu.

While in Kirksville in May Chok exchanged banners with the Kirksville Jaycees. He was national vice-president of the Sabah Jaycees in 1974 and is currently that organization's adviser and director of officer training courses. He is also founder and president of the Malaysian Association of Productivity, Sabah branch, an organization which promotes national growth through manpower training courses.

Chok's visit to Kirksville was part of a six-week vacation during which he and his family visited the Philippines, Hong Kong, Japan, Hawaii, Los Angeles, Washington, D.C., Canada and other sites.

4 Divisions add programs

Three new curriculums will be offered this fall and the addition of new courses will bolster a fourth. The specialist's degree in educational administration, the printing arts area, the mass communication curriculum, and law enforcement have scheduled a variety of courses.

The specialist's program, which recently received approval from the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, will offer four courses on the 700 level. "Systems Analysis in Education," "State and National Finance," "The Superintendency" and "Seminar in Education Administration" will be available for sixth-year work for those who want to take classes beyond the masters degree.

In the printing arts area, the Practical Arts Division will offer

"Offset and Letterpress Operation," "Printing Estimating," and "Production Printing Techniques" as partial requirements for the new two-year program. All of the equipment needed to give students hands-on training arrived this summer.

Designed for people pursuing careers in broadcasting, advertising and public relations, the mass communications curriculum has added a number of new courses. "Photojournalism," "Copyediting," "Broadcast Communication" and "Newswriting" will form the basic core of the four-year program that will graduate its first fully-trained majors in the spring of 1979.

The Law Enforcement concentration has expanded its scope by adding "Juvenile Law and Procedure," "Laws of Arrest, Search and Seizure," "Correctional and Rehabilitative Institutions II," and other courses in order to broaden a student's background in the technical aspects of police work.

$11.4 million total for NMSU budget

by Thomas R. Shrout Jr.

The General Assembly passed and the Governor signed a bill during the last session of the Legislature appropriating NMSU $8,983,421 for the 1975-76 fiscal year. The figure was the amount which Governor Bond had recommended to the General Assembly and slightly more than that which was recommended by the Coordinating Board for Higher Education.

The appropriation plus income from fees and other sources is expected to bring NMSU's total budget to $11,457,195 for the coming fiscal year. This is $801,530 more than last year's budget.

The biggest share of the budget, $8,185,982, will go for salaries and fringe benefits with $662,359 set aside for equipment and $2,608,854 for operating expenses.

The broad budgetary categories receiving funding were: instruction, $5,714,739; organized research, $140,000; academic support, $1,281,724; student programs and services, $1,222,575; and institutional support, $2,990,355. An additional $107,802 is budgeted as inter-program expenses.

Notable budgetary increases included a 49 per cent hike in fuel costs, an 11 per cent electricity increase, a 15 per cent increase in medications for the Student Health Clinic and a 27 per cent printing cost increase for student publications.

In addition $82,060 has been budgeted to provide instructional services and utilities for the Natatorium which is to open soon. Funds also were budgeted for an additional women's coach and a 21 per cent increase in women's athletics for compliance with Title IX of the educational amendments of 1972. An additional $10,200 has been set aside for Bicentennial activities.

Board of Regents President William O'Donnell Lee expressed the appreciation of the entire University, to Governor Bond, members of the Coordinating Board for Higher Education and members of the General Assembly for their support of NMSU. He pledged that the University would continue to strive to provide a quality educational opportunity for the citizens of Missouri.

German alumnus visits campus

During a visit to the campus in July, Karl H. Brune and his family visited with Dr. Pauline Knobbs (third from left), emeritus professor of social science and one of Brune's teachers when he was an exchange student at NMSU from Sept., 1959 to May, 1960. Brune, who lives in Bad Lauterberg, West Germany, teaches English and geography in a junior high school. At NMSU he lived in Brewer Hall and took general education classes and English courses. While talking with personnel in the Alumni Office he said he was impressed with the physical additions to the campus and hopes he can be helpful in encouraging several German students to attend the University.

Pictured with him are his daughter, Melanie, wife, Ingrid, son, Christian, and Mrs. Frances Skaggs (Temple) Stephens of Moberly (B.S.E. '61). Mrs. Skaggs attended Goettingen State Teachers College in Germany when Brune was at NMSU. Brune is a graduate of that school.

Regents enter building contract

The Board of Regents entered into a contract of more than three million dollars for the construction of a new administration/classroom building on campus. The bid was submitted jointly by Reed Construction Company of Kirksville and Lawhon Construction Company of St. Joseph as general contractors for $2,322,000.

Regents honor Mrs. Bunney

by Maggie Jarrett

President McClain hands Mrs. Bunney her resolution

The Board of Regents honored Mrs. Mary Alice Bunney, former president of the Board, with a resolution of appreciation for Mrs. Bunney's 12 years of service on the Board. The resolution noted in part that "among the rich products of her legacy have been an expansion in physical facilities, highlighted by the construction of the Student Union Building; a dramatic increase in enrollment; a significant augmentation in the scholarship program; and a series of name changes which reflect the University's multi-purpose mission."

Mrs. Bunney, the first woman to serve on the NMSU Board of Regents, was first appointed to the Board in early 1963 by former Governor John M. Dalton. Her term expired on Jan. 1 of this year, but she continued to serve until Governor Bond appointed and the Senate confirmed Mrs. Marilyn Beck (see following story) as a member of the Board.

Mrs. Bunney has had a long, distinguished career in education in northeast Missouri, having started as a rural school teacher in Shelby County in 1938 following her graduation from what was then the Northeast Missouri State Teachers College. She also taught for a number of years at Shelbyville High School.

During her 12-year appointment to the Board of Regents, Mrs. Bunney was instrumental in the expansion of the campus, including the construction of 11 major facilities: Ryle Hall, Violette Hall, Campbell Apartments, Missouri Hall, an addition to the Pickler Memorial Library, an addition to the Pershing Building, an addition to the Science Building, Centennial Hall, the Industrial Arts Building, the Student Union Building, and the Natatorium. At her last meeting as a member of the Board, bids were accepted for the new $3.3 million administration-classroom building.

Perhaps the facility of which Mrs. Bunney is most proud is the Student Union Building. When Mrs. Bunney joined the Regents, NMSU was the only state university without a student union facility. She and her husband, George, visited many of the facilities at other campuses on their own time and at their own expense to formulate plans for a facility at NMSU. The Student Union was dedicated Aug. 9, 1966.

Mrs. Bunney became acting president of the Board of Regents in January, 1973, and was elected president of the Board in May of that year. She served in that capacity until June. Mrs. Bunney also served as vice president and secretary during her tenure.

The Bunneys live in Shelbyville. They have a daughter, Mrs. Ray Hazelrigg of Mexico. The Hazelriggs have a son, Dennis.

Mrs. Beck, new Regents' member

Mrs. Marilyn Beck

Mrs. Marilyn Beck of Fulton was sworn in as a member of the Board of Regents at their June meeting. She was given the oath of office by Samuel A. Burk of Kirksville, Board secretary.

Mrs. Beck has been employed as a teacher at the Missouri School for the Deaf since 1969. She graduated from Decatur High School in Decatur, Ill. in 1941 and attended DePauw University in Greencastle, Ind. She graduated with a degree in liberal arts and sciences from the University of Illinois in 1945. She attended Brown's Business College from 1945-46 and attended classes in the Department of Special Education at the University of Missouri in 1974.

She was a secretary in the law offices of LeForgee and Samuels, Decatur, Ill. and in the law offices of Baker, Holt and Krumm in Fulton. She also served as an independent study instructor at the Fulton Junior High School.

Mrs. Beck is a member of the Missouri State Teachers Assn., the Council for Exceptional Children, the Missouri School for the Deaf Teachers Assn. and Delta Gamma social sorority. She is a member of the Court Street United Methodist Church.

She and her husband, Wallace James, have three children; Martha Morgan, Jim and Bill.

Mr. Lee elected Regents' President

William O'Donnell Lee

William O'Donnell Lee, Moberly, was elected the new president of the Board of Regents.

He succeeds Mary Alice Bunney, Shelbyville.

Lee, who had served as vice president, was elected by the regents.

He is a member of the law firm of Hunter, Chamier and Lee in Moberly. Lee is a graduate of Yale Law School.

Placements/Extension moves to Blanton Hall

Reception Area

The office of placements and the office of extension have moved from the north end of Baldwin hall to the southeast corner of Nason Hall.

Previously, the placements office had to schedule a room in the Union for students and interviewers to meet. Now with four fully-furnished interview rooms and a large reception area, interviewers and students can meet formally and informally for discussions.

In addition, the new location contains offices for the director, three file rooms for the large number of files that the office keeps on former students, and a career library. This library will serve students who want more information concerning a chosen employer, the job opportunities in a specific field, or the requirements and abilities needed for the type of work the student is considering.

"In the first place, the physical set-up is more attractive and it enhances our working conditions," said Kathleen Bohon, assistant director of placements. "Second, our office is now more centrally located than it was when we were in Baldwin."

Although the preliminary stages had been planned for several months, the move took place during early summer.

Jean Waters named Miss Illinois Becky Rives named Miss Missouri

by Maggie Jarrett

Jean Waters

Becky Rives

When it comes to contestants in the 1975 Miss America pageant, Northeast Missouri State University has a corner on the market. Two of the 50 beauties who were trying for the title in Atlantic City are part of the 5,500 student body on the Kirksville campus: "Miss Missouri," Rebecca Ann (Becky) Rives of Paris, Mo. and "Miss Illinois," Jean Waters of Tuscola, Ill.

Both girls are 22, University seniors and seasoned in the art of winning pageants. Jean has been entering beauty/talent contests for the past four years and has garnered the titles "Miss Tuscola," "Miss Kirksville," "Miss Cheerleader U.S.A.," and "Miss Crossroads County," the title that ushered her into the 1975 "Miss Illinois" competition. Becky's first official pageant title was "Miss Paris, 1969" followed by "Miss Consolidated Electric Cooperative," "Adair County Cattleman's Queen," "Missouri State Fair Queen," "Missouri Farmer's Daughter," "Missouri Soybean Queen," "Missouri Maid of Cotton" and "Miss Kirksville."

In the pageant Jean performed a gymnastics interpretative dance and Becky sang a medley of Judy Garland songs.

Both girls admitted to having "Cinderella dreams" about one day being Miss America but said as they grow older their motivation for wanting to gain the coveted title changed.

"As I found out about the scholarship and the valuable personal contacts that the title brought with it, I became intensely interested in the pageant not just as a glamour thing but as a means of helping me develop my character," Jean said.

Becky remembers as a small child meeting the then reigning "Miss Missouri" and the admiration she felt toward her.

"She made me feel that possibly I could do this (become Miss Missouri) too and I've kept working at it all these years and it paid off. It took hard work and luck."

After they complete their reigns as "Miss Missouri" "Miss Illinois," both girls intend to complete their undergraduate educations in Kirksville. Jean plans to later pursue an advanced degree in student personnel administration and Becky hopes to use her knowledge of home economics communication as a hostess on a women's television show.

This is not the first time NMSU has had a contestant in the Miss America pageant. "Miss Missouri, 1970", Marcia Mossbarger of Brookfield, was a Spring, 1970 graduate of the University.

Bulldogs toughen for '75 campaign

by William H. Cable

The Bulldogs are coming back! They're not there yet, but new coach Ron Taylor thinks they are starting the climb up the MIAA Conference ladder on the right foot.

NMSU fell on hard times the past two years, mustering only six victories while losing 14 games and playing to a couple of deadlocks.

Taylor has not let any grass grow under his feet since his appointment as taskmaster in January. He devoted considerable time last winter to evaluating returning personnel and seeking new talent.

"Although we got a late start in recruiting, my staff and I are happy with the results of our efforts," he insists. "While it's difficult to evaluate new talent, I know several of the recruits must be ready to play in our opener at Harding College."

Spring drills, conducted in an abbreviated style without pads, produced a few surprises. By and large though, these practices essentially reinforced opinions of the staff about the abilities and attitudes of players.

"The most important development last spring was the cultivation of a winning attitude," Taylor notes. "Before anything else, there must be an atmosphere of enthusiasm and a willingness to work. Our squad demonstrated these characteristics in the April workouts."

The new skipper says some personnel might have to perform both ways in 1975. He hopes to hold that number to minimum.

On offense, Taylor was pleased with progress made in the spring by veteran signal caller Tom Williamson. The senior lost about 20 pounds and checked into camp this August at about 180 pounds. "Tom has improved his quickness and this, in turn, has made him a more effective passer," remarks Taylor. "He should also be a good leader next year."

Williamson netted 1,072 yards via the airways in 1974, but he saw 17 of his 223 attempts picked off by alert defenders.

Taylor plans to use a "Split-Pro" attack. This means the quarterback will throw the pigskin more frequently than he did in the "Veer" offense employed last autumn.

The coach will need good men at the skilled halfback and receiver positions. These spots appear to be in more than adequate hands, provided there are no key injuries or scholastic fatalities.

Returning ball carriers are Steve Powell, top rusher last year with 800 yards in 142 carries; Keith Meadows, 44 attempts for 212 yards; Tony Grosso 62 for 138 yards; plus squadman Darryl Jones and Bob Robinson, honorable mention all-MIAA defensive back last season. Robinson toted the football sparingly as a freshman. He still will be counted on to handle defensive chores.

Pass-catchers back from last fall include flanker Mike Laususe, split ends Joe Ream and Leon Price and tight end Greg Morton, all of whom combined for 73 receptions and 978 yards. Morton was used occasionally at the defensive terminal in the spring.

Taylor's greatest concern offensively is the quality of his interior line. About a dozen returnees will have an opportunity to nail down the five berths in the middle of the forward wall. They include centers Fred Haeger and Bill Armstrong, guards Garry Geisz, Mark Sissom, Marti Rave, Bob Barnes and Steve Caldwell and tackles Dave Rowles, Terry Schulte, Joe Kinsella and Dave Diehl.

Defense seems to be NMSU's forte going into the new campaign. Returning from last year's defensive front are honorable mention all-conference "nose guard" Paul Meyer, second team all-MIAA tackle Dave Diehl and end Mark Sissom. Joe Kinsella and Pat Jones, promising linebacker last season until an injury shelved him, will vie for a tackle berth, too.

Morton and squadman Bob Ranier are in the picture for one of the terminal assignments. A veteran end, Mark Uthlaut, is a big question mark. Last spring, he was still nursing a knee injured during the 1974 campaign.

Holdovers at the linebacking posts are Marti Rave, honorable mention all-league last fall, and Garry Geisz, another starter. However, Mike Lingaton, a walk-on, demonstrated in the spring he was ready to push Geisz and Rave for starting honors.

Experience could be the hallmark of the deep secondary. If Robinson isn't carrying the ball, he will likely be manning the strong safety slot. Gary Evans and Willie Byrd could be the cornerbacks on opening day while Dolfi Herscovici might get the call at free safety.

But two transfers, Steve Ernst from Vermont and Chuck Martin from Arkansas AM & N, plus letterman Joe Kersting and Darryl Jones, are strong contenders for the secondary.

Taylor is banking on two sophomore returnees to handle the kicking area of the game. Sissom averaged 38.2 as a plebe. Kent Fensom was primarily a place-kicker as a yearling, booting 15 of 16 extra point attempts and six of 13 field goal tries. But he showed improvement this spring in his punting, and could see some service in this department next fall. Then too, any of two to three new recruits have the credentials to be excellent kickers.

Bartow to coach UCLA basketball

Gene Bartow

Gene Bartow '52, widely known for his coaching abilities, took over as UCLA's head coach, replacing John Wooden.

Bartow, who, in his 14 years of college coaching has amassed a record of 229 wins to 140 losses, began his duties in April.

Bartow coached six years in high school, then took over as mentor of Central Missouri State in 1961-62.

Bartow moved on to Valparaiso, guiding that team to three NCAA College Division championship rounds before taking over at Memphis State.

He built a national power at Memphis State in the 1971-72 season and was named as coach of the year in the Missouri Valley Conference that year, earning a bid to the National Invitational Tournament in New York City on the merit of the Tigers' 21-7 record.

The following year Bartow was named coach of the year by the National Association of Basketball Coaches as he took the Tigers to the 1973 finals of the NCAA championships before losing to the Bruins, 87-66.

He took the Puerto Rican national team to the 1971 Pan-American Games and the 1972 Munich Olympics where the Puerto Ricans finished fifth.

In 1973, Bartow was selected to coach the U.S. All-Stars who won eight straight games on a trip to the People's Republic of China.

Bartow was born and raised in the Browning community where he played on the basketball team in high school.

Bartow received his degree in education in 1952 from NMSU. While completing his work as a senior, he filled the Greentop coaching vacancy and recorded a 16-6 record.

Where the action was!!

by Thomas R. Shrout, Jr.

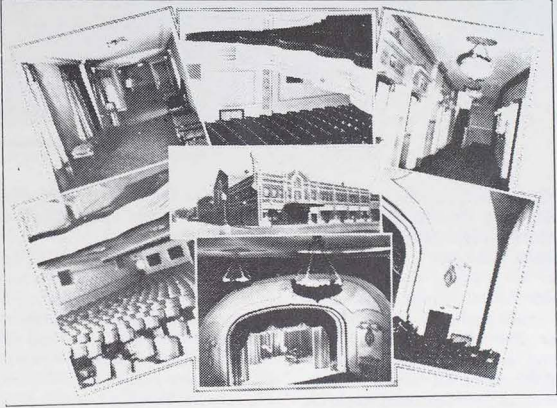

Editor's note: The author would like to give special thanks to Dr. Pauline Knobbs, professor emeritus of social science education, and Mrs. Helen Rieger, curator of the Kirk Museum, who were of great assistance in providing information for this article. The author also realizes many favorite student hang-outs were left out of this article and would welcome letters from alumni for publication in the NEMOSCOPE about their favorite places.

If you're planning a trip to Kirksville this Homecoming and want to have a cup of coffee at the Bulldog Inn, or perhaps dinner at Trevi's or maybe an after-the-game beer at Millard, you're going to have a little trouble.

The Bulldog Inn building now houses the University Stenographic Office, Trevi's burned down, and the structure that Millard once occupied now resounds to the music of church services.

As student tastes have changed through the years so have their hangout. A few places, such as the Tap Room and the Manhattan, successfully weathered the changes and continue to appeal to students, but other popular gathering spots haven't been so successful.

day night now stop in the snackbar of the Student Union. The "Tenderloin through the garden" at the White Cabin has been replaced by a Big Mac or Huskie Junior. And Mom and Pop Crowder who ran Millard would probably shake their heads at the atmosphere of the Zodiac and the Golden Spike.

The difference of restaurants and bars only reflects the changed college environment. Students at the University at the turn of the century didn't have much freedom. Rules prohibited missing class, leaving campus without permission, talking in the library, walking "heavy" in the halls, and skipping study hall. Primary recreation activities centered around church activities, and maybe escorting a girl home from evening services.

In spring and the summer, students could listen to noted lecturers at Chataqua Park, sometimes called DeFranc Park, located between Mullanix and Davis, south of Jefferson. The park also provided ground for the travelling troupes to set up their tents and perform their wondrous shows.

With the 1910 opening of Ownbey Lake, students had a place to fish, rent a boat for 25¢ an hour, picnic, camp out or ice skate in the winter. Owned and operated by the Ownbey family, the lake served as the student center for off-campus activity for the next 35 years.

Later a pavilion was built and entire dance bands or maybe just a piano, saxophone, drum and violin would entertain. And the students began to respond to the music after World War I when dancing finally became acceptable for "respectable" students.

During that period the campus Campfire Girls, the YWCA, and the YMCA maintained an active calendar of events which included picnics and gatherings at Ownbey Lake.

Students occasionally ventured to LaPlata Lake or a lake in Atlanta which had similar facilities. But, because travel was virtually limited to the train, most preferred Ownbey Lake which lay within walking distance.

By the 1940's Ownbey Lake had fallen out of vogue with students. Maintenance of the lake had become a problem. Eventually the lake was overrun with weeds. It wasn't until the early 1960's that the lake was restored and it is now surrounded by a subdivision known as College Park.

The 1950's brought another lake, which became a popular student hangout, 1000 Hills State Park. The park itself opened July 1, 1953 with the lake opening three years later.

"Everyone tried to arrange their schedules in the Spring so as to have the afternoons off so they could spend time at the Lake," recalls Otis G. Baker ('61). Almost any occasion called for a party at the lake. Perhaps the most popular parties were held in connection with the spring student body election, a tradition that continues today.

The 1930's brought the Bulldog Inn, the Huddle, the White Cabin, and the Snack Shop; coffee shops that faithfully served NMSU students for a number of years.

The Bulldog Inn, situated across from Baldwin Hall on what was once Marion Street, was built in 1933 by Hugh Vail, now of Indianola, Iowa. It had numerous owners, but from 1951 until it closed in 1967, Mrs. Virginia Nimmo and her husband operated it. Mr. Nimmo died in 1969, but Mrs. Nimmo continues to work as a cashier for the university food service operation.

Mrs. Nimmo fondly remembers the days when the Bulldog functioned as one of the centers of student activity.

"It was hard work and long hours, but we tried to keep the atmosphere like home. There were a lot of good times and funny things happen, like the time I served a sandwich without any meat," Mrs.

Nimmo recalls.

The Nimmos featured home cooking, especially hamburger steak, French fries and salad. Ninetenths of the time the Bulldog was full or overcrowded.

The Bulldog was the favorite spot for Dr. Ryle to drink his morning coffee and discuss, with three or four administrators, issues and problems of the University.

After the Bulldog Inn closed, the building was purchased by the University and has housed the Stenographic Office. When the new Classroom/Administration building is completed, the Bulldog Inn will leave no remains as the old wooden structure will be demolished and the ground it stands on landscaped.

In preparation for the new building the demolition crews have already finished off the Quonset hut that held the Snack Shop.

Closed in 1973 and replaced by a bike store, the Snack Shop, across from Baldwin Hall on Normal, provided a haven for the Fine Arts faculty and students. The late Harold McClelland, his wife, Jean, and his mother, Dorothy, ran the Snack Shop from 1949 until they sold it in 1971. The McClellands grew to be an integral part of the music program providing work for music majors and even scholarships.

Dr. Tom Duden ('54), director of bands, worked at the Snack Shop in his undergraduate days.

"If a student was ever broke he could count on eating at the Snack Shop because Mack would carry him until he could get some money to pay him back," Tom says.

Often the NEMO Singers or the Band would eat breakfast at the Snack Shop before going on tour.

The Huddle, a favorite sport for jocks and P.E. majors, closed several years ago and was torn down in 1966 when Missouri Hall was built.

Until the late 1960's smoking wasn't allowed on campus, so faculty and students usually took their smoke break at one of these places.

The White Cabin, at the corner of Jefferson and Elson, which featured "tenderloins through the garden" was demolished about 1971. In September 1972 a national hamburger chain, Hardees, opened on the same site. Hardees has maintained the White Cabin tradition of serving a large number of students from KCOM as well as from NMSU.

While there are no longer any coffee shops adjacent to campus, the last four years has seen a tremendous growth in national food franchise operations along Baltimore Street, east of Campus. Since 1971, Ken's Pizza Parlor, Kentucky Fried Chicken, Sirloin Stockade, Taco-Tico, and Macdonalds have all opened, joining the Dairy Queen, the Pizza Hut, the A & W. Drive Inn, and the Hi-Ho Drive-In which is credited with offering the first 15c hamburger during the fall of 1961.

Downtown, Pagliai's Pizza operates out of the old Citizens National Bank Building at the corner of Washington and Franklin. And Minn's, the first Chinese Restaurant in North Missouri, serves an authentic Mandarin menu to NMSU students from literally all over the world.

The Manhattan which is patronized by KCOM students opened prior to World War II. For a time, Joe Noble ran it. Later it was taken over by Bill Stoukas who continues to operate today. It still retains a cafe atmosphere and is known for good food at a moderate price.

The late 50's brought the appearance of another good restaurant, Trevi's, an Italian cafe run by Al Abadessa. Abadessa had run the restaurant at the Colonial Manor, but when that changed hands he decided to open Trevi's.

The restaurant was located off Highway No. 6, about a mile from Highway No. 63. With red-checked table cloths, Chianti bottles on the tables and a fountain at the entrance, Trevi's gave Kirksville its first specialty restaurant. The restaurant stayed open from 4 p.m. until 11 p.m. and enjoyed almost immediate success.

Greener pastures prompted Abadessa to open the Gas Light Room in Macon on January 1, 1962. In 1963, Trevi's burned down.

Abadessa's Gas Light Room still draws well from students, especially for special occasions such as Greek formals. And the restaurant is perhaps even more popular with faculty and staff.

Elaine's opened in the early 60's and became popular with students for informal discussions after club meetings or basketball games. Elaine's cinnamon rolls with coffee or a coke drew students by the dozens. Photos of campus and of Kirksville hung on the walls.

from local business, but at the same time providing the long-needed facility entrepreneurs would find unprofitable. Many faculty and townspeople patronize noon buffet in the Union's Spanish Room. The Snack Bar serves primarily students. The Georgian Room's cafeteria line hosts a variety of groups. Students and faculty often continue their classroom discussions over the meals served in the Georgian Room.

Forty years prior to the opening of the Union, the Travelers Hotel opened to provide a similar spot which catered to both students and townspeople. The Travelers dining room was a popular place for Sunday buffet after church. The Travelers also contained a large ballroom that was used by clubs and organizations for parties, dances and banquets.

Like the Travelers, the Dockery and the Stevenson were hotels which were noted for their food.

Prior to the closing of the dining room at the Dockery, George Nelson ('59) recalled the $1 steak night which was popular with students. For the dollar, a patron could eat two eggs, French fries, and a huge steak.

"During one of the big spring dances Les Elgard was on campus. A friend of mine, John Mullin, and I got to talking with Les because we all came from the same area of New Jersey," Nelson remembers.

"Elgard finally asked us where a good place to eat was so after the dance we took him to the $1 steak special at the Dockery. We ended up staying up late eating and playing pinball machines."

Apparently the "New Jersey approach" was effective because later Mullin dined with Les Brown and wife at the Dockery after an Echo Dance.

Today the Holiday Inn south of town, built in 1963, the Bonfoey Inn with a just completed motel section and the Shamrock Inn take a large share of the motel business in Kirkville. The Colonial Manor continues to operate north on Highway 63 along with the Green Gables. When overflow conditions existed in the dormitories in the 1960's, the Gables kept many students until dorm rooms could be rearranged or other accommodations found.

During the 20's, most students lived in boarding houses — Mrs. Straw's, Mrs. Stevenson's or Mrs. Cauby's — and consequently didn't eat out much.

So a really big evening might mean a movie at the Princess, New Liberty or Kennedy Theatre.

The Kennedy opened March 26, 1926, according to manager Bill Hopper, with "Let's Get Married" starring Richard Dix, and a three-act vaudeville show. Vaudeville thrived in Kirkville, the logical stop between Chicago and Kansas City. The 1940's were good times for movies in Kirkville with both the Kennedy and the Princess doing well. The New Liberty had closed much earlier.

The Bulldog Inn exterior in '65

However, the advent of television stole the audience from vaudeville and the Princess closed about 1956. Today the Kennedy remains the only theater from that era with the Silver Star Drive In, the only other theater serving Kirksville. Today the Princess has been converted into the Tina Fabric Shop.

Often a movie date in the 20's called for a drive in the country, perhaps to gaze at the moon. More than once this kind of fun was interrupted by members of the local chapter of the Ku Klux Klan. For a time the vigilant Klansmen acted as moral agents as they patrolled the country roads at night. A threat to turn the students' names over to President Kirk usually would send the couple scurrying back to town.

After World War II, two of the places most often remembered by alumni from their college days began to flourish, Millard and the Tap Room.

Millard opened in 1930 under the management of John Cunningham.

It changed owners several times and was run from 1946 until 1954 by Bob Wilson who sold it to Allen Crowder, whose parents helped run the place. They are remembered by many as "Mom" and "Pop" Crowder.

It wasn't much different than any other bar, being a large room with a bar at one end and bowling machines, a pinball machine, and a juke box lining the wall. There was a small room off to the side for dancing. And restroom facilities were a few yards behind the building if a person had the patience to walk that far.

Alumni who reminisce about Millard recall driving south on Highway No. 63 toward Millard. With no house lights along the road it was pitch black, and Millard's Budweiser sign lit up the surrounding countryside for miles. About a half-mile from the bar someone was sure to say, "There it stands like an oasis in the middle of the desert."

It is rumored in later years that students under 21 years of age could "occasionally" purchase beer at Millard. It is rumored, also, that one night Coach Boyd King walked in the front door and the entire NMSU basketball team dived out the back window.

It is further rumored that one alum gone from Kirksville for a number of years (the Baptist Church bought the building after the bar closed in 1962) walked in on early morning church services at Millard thinking the cars outside belonged to students still celebrating from an all-night party.

The Tap Room opened in the basement of the Travelers Hotel in 1933 after prohibition ended.

The interior was done in a Western motif with hickory chairs and barrel tables. The table tops acquired a unique finish as it became a custom for students to carve their initials in the table.

"The place and students were real good to me for 20 years," Benny Walker who ran the place from

The interior of the Bulldog Inn in '62

1949 until 1970 recalls. "The NMSU students and the osteopathic students got along real well at the Tap Room. And that was saying something back then."

In the mid 50's, Walker hired the two co-captains of the football team to tend bar after the season. "Boy, was Red Wade ever surprised when he walked in one night to check on the football team and found his two co-captains tending bar."

One alum remembers drinking beer in the Tap Room from the time he was 19. But he pushed his luck too far and got an ignoble retort from Benny Walker when, on his 21st birthday, he asked for his free birthday beer. Benny threw him out.

Among other events, BBWC organization was founded at the Tap Room. Although it is a secret club, it is rumored that BBWC is an organization primarily devoted to alcoholic intake.

A certain mystique surrounds the BBWC. Exploits, origins, initiation ceremonies, even the words that B.B.W.C. represent are topics of extensive and farfetched conversation.

In fact, the BBWC became such a notorious group that in the 1960's an article on social activities appeared in the INDEX which read: "A meeting of the BBWC was held recently. Benny Walker was guest speaker. Refreshments were served and a good time was had by all."

It apparently slipped the careful eye of INDEX advisor Agnes Slemmons, who probably didn't ask about type of refreshments or meeting location.

In 1975, the BBWC and the Tap Room is still alive and well but is facing stiff competition from the Zodiac, a bar which regularly features live entertainment.

In 1971 Kirksville voters authorized liquor by the drink and this brought about a change in night life in Kirksville for not only the students, but the townspeople as well.

The Zodiac opened in August of 1972 next to the fire station on West Harrison, and after two and a half years of overwhelming success with students, was gutted by fire this past spring. On July 4, it was reopened at the corner of Main and McPherson.

The interior includes a game room with a huge television screen for watching sports events like Monday Night Football, and a glass wall which separates an area for those under 21, and an area for those old enough to drink. Situated between the two is a high band pedestal with a dance floor for both age groups.

And, although it has been 65 years since the Ownbey Lake was built, although the piano, saxophone and violin have been replaced by lead guitar, bass guitar and electric organ, the dance floor serves the same function as the pavilion at Ownbey Lake. It serves as a place where dancing is acceptable for "respectable" students.

The Margin of difference

The administration, faculty and students at NMSU have all been the subject of self-evaluation.

NMSU projects a very favorable image among its various publics. This was the determination of a study conducted last January when 43 persons, representing a cross section of alumni leaders, corporations and foundations along with selected representatives from the immediate core area served by the University, were interviewed.

The study had three basic objectives: (1) To determine the feasibility of launching the University's first development program. (2) To get a focus from within and a cross section of opinion from outside on the mission of the University. (3) To view the image of the institution as seen through the eyes of its various publics, including opinions on the strengths and weaknesses of the various departments and programs at NMSU.

The study reinforced the findings of questionnaires and other evaluative procedures which give NMSU very high ratings in instructional effectiveness, student achievement and the achievements and on-the-job performance of its graduates. The administration, faculty and students at NMSU have all been the subject of self-evaluation with the faculty being rated not only by current students but former students and their employers as well. NMSU is the only college or university in Missouri and one of the few in the country to conduct this type of evaluation program.

The study also indicated a positive response to the proposed development program.

A healthy respect for the University and its administration was reflected in the feasibility study. Many indicated, however, a desire to know more about the various programs and services at the University. They recognized the tradition of excellence of NMSU as a teaching institution but felt that because times and circumstances are changing the University is moving into other areas and dimensions relevant to today's needs. As a result, there will be an emphasis on alumni activities and a concerted effort will be made to bring the University even closer to its constituents.

The study also indicated a positive response to the proposed development program. Jim Valentine, a consultant who conducted the study and is helping launch the program, said almost everyone interviewed endorsed the program with many feeling that the program was something that has been needed for some time.

As a result, President McClain and the Board of Regents decided to institute a development program for private support. The program has been under consideration for some time. It is the result of careful considerations by faculty and administration and the direct recommendations of the commission on goals and priorities established in 1972. After careful consideration of all the options available, it was concluded that an emphasis on quality and the integrity of the mission at NMSU would only be possible through significant private support. This support would not duplicate that of the state which goes for basic operating expenses but would provide the leverage to build a greater university.

Such support has enabled many institutions to maintain their health, vitality and integrity during a time of declining enrollment and various economic and social pressures. An appreciative and committed constituency provided the financial support to insure their mission and purpose.

A steering committee has been appointed to review the needs of the University and select those considered most critical to the immediate future of the University. They will lay the groundwork during the coming year for a three-year campaign. The committee will determine the goal of the campaign and serve as its governing body. Members included Harvey Young, Ray Bentele, P.M. Marr, Gerry Guinn, Glenn Hocker, Dr. Earl Laughlin, Sam Burk, Ralph Shain and Dr. Walter Ryle.

Student aid will play an increasingly important role in determining the degree of quality of the University. A great many of today's young people with the greatest potential are unable to take advantage of a university education without financial assistance.

Two years ago the Pershing Scholarship Program was created to provide 20 full scholarships to outstanding high school seniors. The program has already had considerable impact on NMSU. Thirty-nine of the 40 selected continue to qualify for the program while assuming leadership roles in all aspects of campus life and activities. In addition, they have brought with them classmates and acquaintances with superior potential. Projections indicate that each Pershing Scholar brings three good students with him to NMSU. There are no funds available for the needed ten additional Pershing Scholarships and they are possible only through private support.

In addition, partial scholarships and loan funds are needed to provide the margin of difference for a number of students with potential, enabling them to take advantage of a university education. Unquestionably student aid will be a major factor in this initial development thrust.

Another area critical to the quality and vitality of NMSU is the availability of funds for research and special opportunities for the faculty. An emphasis in this area in recent years has enabled the University to attract some outstanding new faculty members and to retain others of exceptional ability.

With federal funding diminishing at a rapid rate, the need for private support becomes increasingly important. Some state support is available for this area but not nearly enough to meet the demands of a vigorous NMSU faculty.

Viable programs for support contribute substantially to the health and well being of state institutions of superior quality throughout the country. Some, like NMSU, are just beginning.

At one state college with demographic and institutional characteristics similar to that of NMSU, but with half of the student population and less than half of the urban population in the area of the college, a development campaign reached its announced goal of $600,000. Within the three-year campaign period, the college also received a foundation gift approaching $1,000,000. Valentine, who had helped launch this campaign, said an additional gift of land valued at more than $2,000,000 had been promised the college.

Success in meeting the campaign objectives, as outlined by the campaign steering committee, will be of critical importance to NMSU. The immediate results of the development campaign will include the actual construction of the programs in student aid and faculty enrichment. But, more importantly, the climate of giving produced by the campaign will produce the long-range funds needed to give the administrations of NMSU the freedom and flexibility to maneuver in an environment threatened by lack of resources. Often, situations that contain suggestions of a crisis can be converted into an opportunity for extracting creative potential through the use of skilled application of needed monetary support. A development campaign can create the margin of difference between a college that cannot carry on its purposes and one that breeds exceptional graduates through creative programs. NMSU can become a college that realizes its potential.

The Lady is a Cop

by Maggie Jarrett

Pat Wright realizes that something potentially dangerous could happen to her at anytime. But she doesn't worry about it.

As one of the first two patrolwomen to graduate from the Missouri State Highway Patrol Academy in its 43-year history, Patricia R. Wright (law enforcement '73) is now patrolling the Jefferson City area. This patrol is her first assignment since completing the academy's strenuous 22-week training course in January.

Unwittingly, Pat has gained a sizable amount of notoriety since becoming one of two females to be among the 29 recruits accepted into the class that began last fall. The Patrol said that it has never really excluded women from its ranks — just that none had applied until last spring. Pat, 23 from Macon, and Bridget Cronin, 22 from St. Louis, were selected from a field of more than 500 applicants on the basis of their scores on intelligence and aptitude tests, physical examinations, personal interviews, past job records and other standards. While an undergraduate she had been one of the first female members of the NMSU campus Honor Guard, a student branch of the Safety and Security Division, and had worked part-time as a dispatcher and patrolman. After graduation, Pat worked as a member of the University of Missouri-Columbia campus police force.

So when she entered the Patrol, which was a natural progression in her career, Pat did not expect, and did not receive, any special treatment because of her sex. Five days a week it was up at 5:30 a.m., calisthenics before breakfast, classes from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. followed by a one-mile run and close-orders drill. Classes covered academics and physical training including arson and bomb investigation, criminology, fingerprinting, first aid, criminal law, psychology and self-defense. Before her five months ended the recruits had run 200 miles and done 5,000 push-ups . . . at a minimum.

As an undergraduate, Pat had gained experience in handling firearms so that part of the academy training was not as new to her as it was to her female classmate. For Pat, the physical training proved the most challenging. She said it wasn't often that she led the pack during their pre-dinner run but that she managed to keep up.

Both she and Bridget stressed that being a woman in the academy was no handicap. They lived in the same dormitory complex with the other recruits and shared a suite in the corner of one wing. The only inconvenience they experienced was the lack of women's locker rooms. When they wanted to change into gym shorts or swimsuits they had to run to a women's restroom or back to the dorm.

As for the glamorous life of a policewoman portrayed by some television shows, Pat says that's just not the way it is.

"Something could happen to me at any time. You just can't worry about it." She carries a gun most of the time as a natural part of her professional dress. In fact, she says the only persons who have considered her acceptance into the highway patrol as unusual have been members of the news media.

What happens when she “pulls over” a male for traffic violation?

“Some seem surprised at first. They might say, ‘I didn’t realize there were women patrolmen.’ They’re usually too shook up about being stopped to make any sarcastic comments.”

Pat says her job is both fun and rewarding. Recently she and two patrolmen organized a mock highway patrol at Girls State, an assembly of high school girls from throughout the state who met to learn about the process of government. She instructed a group of girls in the duties of the patrol and then released them to perform those duties on the campus.

She plans to continue in the patrol as far as she can go, from trooper to corporal, to sergeant and on up. Eventually she’d like to specialize in investigative law enforcement, perhaps undercover narcotics investigation. She considers the highway patrol the most professional branch of law enforcement in the state. And that’s what she wants.

The Baldwin Lecture; Pluralism & Meritocracy

Harold L. Hodgkinson, recently-appointed director of the National Institute of Education, gave this year's Baldwin Lecture. The Following are excerpts from his speech.

In this paper I would like first to develop some of the factors that have pushed us to the current concerns with evaluation, accountability, and effectiveness of the higher educational system, and secondly to indicate how higher education has responded to these demands. Some comments will also be offered as to where the next few years may take us.

To begin with, we might provide an overall historical context by saying that there have been three major stages of higher education development in the United States. The first was an elitist concern with perhaps 1% of the age cohort in colleges and universities. During this aristocratic period, no one was terribly concerned about educational evaluation or standards because one's accomplishments were seldom the reason why one went to college, nor the reason why one left. (The gentleman's "C" at Harvard was a perfect example of the students' contempt for faculty values during this period.) However, immediately after World War II large numbers of people sought access to higher education and saw it as their primary route for personal upward mobility in the social structure. During this time, more people wanted to get into higher education than could possibly be accommodated, and several devices were developed to restrict access. Among these was the development of sophisticated "aptitude" tests which served the function of deciding who the "meritorious" among the youth cohort should be. As we shall see, the criteria for "merit" that were emphasized during these years may not be the only criteria that are useful in a democracy like ours. The meritocratic period, however, was a period of high demand for educational services and little testing of the final product. The society still assumed that the B.A. degree was worth what we said it was.

We are now entering, somewhat hesitatingly, a third stage of higher education development which could be called egalitarian. Fewer people seek higher education, and among those that do a new conviction has developed that each person should be educated to the extent of his or her ability, rather than restricting access to higher education to a select few. One of the major clashes of culture now present on many campuses is that between state legislators and administrators, who often are thinking in more egalitarian terms, and many faculty who are still thinking in meritocratic terms. And, indeed, the issue of what constitutes a quality education, or what the standards are, or should be, is one of the major issues of the day, placing increasing stress of the evaluation of performance within higher education, from the level of accrediting institutions down to the performance of the individual student in a course.

In addition to these population trends, it is quite clear that a major reversal has taken place in the average American's faith in the social institutions that make the country work. We in higher education, often isolated from other institutions in society, may not realize that this lack of faith in us is amply demonstrated to have taken place in most other areas of the society as well. The other side of the question has to do with the faith people have in themselves — that is, if one lives in a society in which one does not have much faith in one's social institutions that enable one to participate in that society, then what sort of credibility can one have regarding one's own life? It may well be that the relative disillusionment that Americans express today with social institutions and the comments one hears regarding a low personal sense of self-worth are very much related to each other.

Another component of this problem, as exemplified in James O'Toole's book called Work In America, has to do with the fact that the average American does not get much personal satisfaction out of his or her employment, and this perhaps may be a consequence of, or a catalyst for, the lack of faith in social institutions that we have been discussing. In addition, one has to face the fact that the income levels of high school graduates compared to college graduates have been changing their shape recently. It is still true that college graduates make more money than high school graduates, but the amount of extra income has been steadily declining since 1900, and the degree to which one can support a different life style on a college graduate's salary, compared to a high school graduate's salary, is no longer as clear-cut as it used to be.

We have a great deal of concern for the kinds of judgments being made by higher education regarding individuals' "merit." Consider an experiment done a few years ago with a group of second-grade students who were ranked according to their academic ability and aptitude. Knowing this about these individuals, we could make some fairly clear predictions about their future. Those in the highest quadrant of ability would end up in selective institutions; those in the next sector would probably go to non-selective colleges and universities; those in the third would probably go to a community college; but the people in the bottom quadrant would have no clearly defined educational function, and perhaps might best be sterilized so that American society would not have to put up with them. (Indeed, certain other societies, having made use of intelligence test data in this way, have considered such activities; but if one has visited France lately it is quite clear that such actions were not taken by the French government.)

Indeed, we have always assumed that grades in college are related to success in later life along many dimensions of success. But even this notion now has to be reconsidered. Most of the studies which attempt to correlate grades in college with success in later life have indicated a lack of relationship here that is quite extraordinary. Aptitude tests, then, predict success as an undergraduate in college, and the Graduate Record Exam predicts success as a graduate student, but the relation of all this to what some students refer to as the "afterlife," the adult world of work, of family, of community participation, etc., is an area in which these predictors fall to near zero. Perhaps, then, it is time to begin a reconsideration of what we mean by merit, both in American society and in the higher educational system, and to think of how we can attain these new definitions.

It is still true that college graduates make more money than high school graduates, but the amount of extra income has been steadily declining.

I would like to take a brief look at some of the responses higher education has made to these new challenges. First of all, we have seen a wealth of new programs developed in a way which helped to make institutions more directly accountable for the kinds of educational missions they undertake. However, these new programs are primarily in the areas of new ways of packaging existing curricula, e.g., modularization, the Keller plan, etc., and new ways of evaluating existing curricula. If one looks at competency-based learning, contract models, and field experience programs, one does not find a great deal of new content. Rather, one finds new ways of assessing the degree of acquisition of that content which students have managed. Thus, the new programs are significantly deficient in terms of developing new ways of thinking about the nature of the stuff which students are to learn. The question raised over a century ago — what knowledge is of most worth? — remains as open a question today as ever.

We also have begun to discover the seeking about for new clientele, particularly in the form of "non-traditional study." Non-traditional study in the United States has taken several forms, primarily to try to recapture the large number of adults who are currently engaging in educational activities but who have found that their needs are being met more effectively by institutions other than colleges and universities. If one looks at who the new clientele are supposed to be, one finds that they are characteristically of the disenfranchised, including women, blue-collar workers, and those who have not had much chance at higher education up until this time. However, if one looks at who the non-traditional students actually are, one finds that they are very much like the traditional students, only older. They tend to be Caucasian, male, making rather good incomes, heavily from managerial backgrounds, and very high on persistence. In other words, they are people whose education was interrupted and who simply wish to complete educations already begun.

Our ways of adapting to these new students have been primarily to expand existing hours and courses to meet the time demands of the new students. In addition, residential requirements have been cut back considerably to allow the student more freedom in terms of meeting curricular needs. Note once again, however, that the basic curriculum has not changed much, simply the extension of services and hours. Other institutions have tried to develop specific programs based on adult needs, while still others have emphasized learning contracts for adults, and a fourth, particularly exemplified in New York state, has emphasized credit by examination, particularly the Regents' Degree Program. Although these new programs are attracting fairly large numbers of adults into higher education, it is quite clear that they are again programs organized for the "mainstream" and that if one wishes to go out and find people of lower-class backgrounds and individuals from minority groups, one really has to recruit them; they do not tend to come into open-door programs in large numbers.

Existing faculty members will simply have to be more effective.

Response of higher education to this new set of initiatives has been an increasing concern with faculty development. Existing faculty members will simply have to be more effective and probably more efficient in terms of their activities and the amount of knowledge they produce. Thus, we have looked both at a number of faculty development activities and the kinds of outcomes these activities are supposed to produce in the last few years. Such programs have been burgeoning in the United States. Along with this comes the general realization that faculty time is probably the most precious resource an institution has. When a faculty member is put on tenure at age 30, that decision is about half a million dollars in terms of total institutional funding that will be required for that person before he is 65 and retired. If one considers how business makes half-million-dollar decisions, it may be salutary to consider how we make tenure decisions.

In addition, the whole area of educational evaluation is beginning to become much more sophisticated, and some new ways of looking at the questions of criteria, standards, and technique have begun to take hold. The instrumentation now available for evaluating programs, institutions, and individual courses is quite extensive. We have looked at a number of the evaluation devices which are used to evaluate learning contracts and competency-based learning, and have discovered that although they are much more specific on criteria and technique than previous evaluation devices, they are still somewhat deficient on the question of standards, which remains the most difficult educational question of all. The problem with the standards question is that one is never sure what the reference group is to which the person is being compared. Is it all previous students the instructor has ever taught, or all faculty members who have ever been candidates for tenure, or on the other hand is it the "current crop" of students, or the current batch of faculty candidates? Or, on the other hand, is it some Platonic ideal of the perfect student or the ideal faculty member? The reference group for which evaluation judgments are made in terms of standards is seldom specified. If the standards were specified by the reference group, this would be a move of major importance in terms of understanding the relationship between standards and performance. At the present time this relationship is somewhat vague, and the same student who gets a "B" from one instructor could get a "C" from another instructor for the same performance level. This is not pluralism; this is simply misapplication of standards, and as the current rash of consumerist suits has shown us in the courts of law in the United States, it will not long be tolerated.

We must protect the pluralism of American higher education, and this means that many different kinds of institutions will try to solve these problems in their own way. This is as it should be, but it is our hope that out of this blend will come some kind of orchestration of concerns that will meet a larger number of educational needs of a larger segment of the American population. If we do this, we will have to realize that many institutions in this society have educational functions besides higher education, and we will have to collaborate with them. This will mean finding out more about the world of work. It will mean finding out more about museums, theaters, social welfare agencies, newspapers, churches, and other educationally-related agencies. If these resources can be made available to a large proportion of our citizens, then by the end of the decade of the 70's we may indeed become what many people have aspired to for a generation or two, and that is a learning society, in which learning opportunities are available to anyone who wants them, regardless of age or station in life. There is no reason to think that such a society would lack standards, as long as we are explicit about what our standards are and how they relate to American society in general. This is indeed a worthy goal, and one which we can accomplish by the end of the decade.

Bartow, nominated by the Blue Springs Elementary-Hansel Lowe PTA, was selected from among a list of seven nominees for the annual Chamber of Commerce award. He was chosen for his leadership abilities in the community, according to Dr. John Montgomery, chairman of the selection committee. "His selection doesn't so much reflect what he has done, which is quite a lot," said Montgomery, "but what he causes others to get done. His primary area of work has been building a school system that the administrative staff, teachers, students and community can be proud of, but he also has been active in the community on the Manpower Board, Blue Springs Industry Board and an active chairman." Bartow was honored at a Chamber of Commerce dinner in January and was also installed as president of the Chamber. He has been superintendent of schools in Blue Springs since 1971 and before that was Dean of the Central Missouri State University residence center in Independence for a year, and was superintendent of schools at Fort Osage for ten years.
