President's Corner

With the passing of Lyle E. Carter, Assistant Professor of Industrial Arts, this College has lost one of its most dedicated members. He was an alumnus of the College, receiving the Bachelor of Science in Education degree in 1948, and in 1949 he completed the work for the Master of Arts degree. After completing work for a master's degree in this College he entered the University of Missouri where he had completed more than an additional year of graduate study.

He was a member of the faculty of the Ophelia Parrish Junior High School from 1949 to 1956. He joined the Teachers College faculty on September 1, 1956, and thus served in this capacity for eight years prior to his death.

He was a veteran of World War II. He was a member of the 409th Infantry of the 103rd Division. During his military service he was seriously wounded, the effects of which bothered him until the day of his death.

He loved his Alma Mater and was a dedicated and devoted teacher. He was never too busy to stop and talk with students that came to him for consultation and help. He was interested in helping them to grow and to develop into good teachers. I have often heard him remark that some successful teacher in the public schools of our area was once his student. He usually closed by saying, "He was a good boy. I knew he would make good." He won the admiration and affection of a great many students.

Our College has lost a loyal and faithful alumnus, one of its dedicated and effective teachers, and I have lost a true friend, one in whose integrity and trustworthiness I had implicit confidence.

Remarks by Gov. Dalton at the Dedication of Violette Hall, October 16, 1964

We are here to mark a milepost in the progress of Northeast Missouri State Teachers College—to lay the cornerstone of a building made necessary by the college's continued growth and expanding service to this area and our state.

It is gratifying to be with you, and to share your pride, because in my term of office as your Governor, nothing has been closer to my heart than the forward march of education in Missouri.

This one and one-half-million-dollar building, Violette Hall, with its 50 classrooms and other facilities, to occupy an entire city block, dramatizes the kind of brick-and-glass-and-steel preparation essential to growing college enrollments.

Here at Kirksville we have seen the student body grow from 1,117 for the 1953-54 school year to 4,417 for the present school year.

Expenses for operation and capital improvements have gone up from $1,653,800 in the 1953-55 biennium to more than $7,000,000 for the 1963-65 biennium.

These figures are important. However, physical progress is no more vital than the intangible gains that must go with it. We must create and maintain and improve on each campus the atmosphere of learning. We must remember that buildings, however handsome and modern, cannot teach, and are not the index of an institution's worth. The value of a college depends upon its ability to turn out graduates trained to live with honor and satisfaction and distinction in the era to which they were born.

We must have the professors, the administrators and college boards who can set a tone and tempo of accomplishment that will inspire students to do their best. Woodrow Wilson said achievement has come to be the "only real patent of nobility." If that is a truth, and I think it is, our colleges are the real patent offices of our time.

And while I am gratified by Missouri's forward movement in higher education, I know there is much, much more to be done. We have expanded the university into a four-campus system to serve the growing masses of young Missourians living in our great metropolitan areas. We have provided a system of state aid to sustain and stimulate local junior colleges. And we are managing to meet the most urgent needs for expansion of our fine state colleges.

Even more significantly, perhaps, we have created the Missouri Commission on Higher Education as an instrument of coordination and cooperation. Its members are educators and laymen and its executive secretary is a skilled professional, Dr. Ben Morton. It is surveying the scene in Missouri, both as to our public and our private institutions of higher learning, and it is in a position to observe and understand the whole picture far better than any other agency that ever existed in this state.

The commission has limited powers, but I fully expect its conclusions to exert a powerful influence upon college boards, the legislature and the governor. The beginning of any solution is an understanding of the problem, and the studies the commission is making will certainly provide a better outline for action than has ever been available to any of us in the past. Let us briefly consider some of the areas now falling under the commission's scrutiny:

1. Population trends on a county and regional basis by age groups.
2. The characteristics of students attending different types of institutions of higher education.
3. Enrollment projections.
4. The relationship of college attendance to such factors as proximity of higher education facilities.
5. Trends and characteristics of the programing within the colleges and universities of the state.
6. The general budgetary needs of state supported institutions of higher education.
7. An intensive examination of additional higher education needs in the Bootheel, Joplin and St. Joseph areas.
8. The basic and major roles of different institutions and groups of institutions in meeting the total state higher education needs.
9. Preliminary exploration of space utilization practices on the state supported campuses.
10. Existing programs of student aid and need for more.
11. The tuition and fees structure of state colleges and universities.

This type of research into the questions facing Missouri is going to be enormously helpful. It will guide our efforts to make available to all young Missourians at reasonable cost the kind and quality of education essential to a rewarding existence in this age of space. It will define basic objectives and responsibilities. It will help us get the best value out of our educational dollar in both the public college and the private college.

Governor John M. Dalton speaking at the dedicatory services for Violette Hall on October 16. Some of the platform guests are shown in the background.

The commission's report is another month away, but I am sure it will be concerned among other things, with two major problems for which we must search out solutions.

One is technical and terminal education beyond high school. This is the kind of non-baccalaureate education that leads directly to jobs, the sort of training that is becoming increasingly essential to young people who are not going to enroll in college, but who have not quite been prepared by a high-school diploma for earning a living in an economy of constantly increasing complexity.

The other is graduate education, where we have not attained the level of achievement that ought to prevail in a state of our wealth and size. Nationally there were 95,000 graduate degrees awarded in the 1962-63 school year, the most recent one for which figures are available. Missouri colleges and universities, both private and public, awarded a total of only 2,259 of these, of which a mere 294 were at the doctoral level.

Our problem in higher education is formidable and expensive, but in the long run much less costly to meet than to avoid.

We have, I think, an increasing public understanding of the need. We have moved, with general approval, in the direction of an enlightened public policy in higher education. That policy is simply to provide college education for all young Missourians who want it and who can benefit from it, regardless of their economic level.

With Missouri's wealth of material and human resources; with well-educated citizens comprising a growing group within the electorate; with state government willing to assume financial responsibilities that cannot be reasonably or profitably shirked; with the prudent and studious approach we can expect from our Commission on Higher Education . . . there is no reason for Missouri to fail its younger generations.

What we are doing here today is impressive to us, but it is still only one small step in the whole great future of education in our state. Yet, one step after another, we are going to advance until we have achieved the educational standards and the adequate college facilities that must be the mark of a modern state in a complex and sophisticated age!

Education Adviser in British Guiana

Dr. Leonard Douglas, M.A. 1949, held the unique position of business education adviser to the South American country of British Guiana from 1961 to 1963. Dr. Douglas returned to Las Cruces, New Mexico, on July 15, 1963, to resume his duties at New Mexico State University as director of secondary education. He holds the Ed. D. degree from Colorado State College of Education.

It was through a circular he saw in the spring of 1960 that Dr. Douglas first learned of the position in Guiana. He applied, and ten months later, February 27, 1961, he arrived in Georgetown, British Guiana. With him was his wife, Bonnie Rose, who resigned her position as a first grade teacher in Las Cruces in order to make the trip, and their daughter, Lynne, a junior in high school.

British Guiana is a small country on the northeastern coast of South America, bordered by Venezuela, Brazil, and Dutch Guiana; and it is known as the "Land of Six Peoples," since its population is of six different origins, each of which has become associated with certain particular occupations over the years.

First there are the Africans, descendants of former slaves, who are the wage earners, particularly in civil service positions, teaching, and clerical positions. Next came the Chinese, who are largely shopkeepers, chiefly in grocery and dry goods stores. The Portuguese are also shopkeepers, but generally not in competition with the Chinese.

The fourth group are "Amerindians", the native Indian inhabitants of British Guiana, who are the hunters, fishermen, and traders. The fifth major group are the East Indians, descendants of indentured servants from India, who are the agriculturists of the country.

Lastly there are all others, mostly Europeans, who are classified together as a group and who work as managers, administrators, and in various professions.

People who go to British Guiana do not expect to remain long. Many who were born there plan to leave if possible. Hence the country lacks a cementing culture and tradition to hold it together. This lack has led to racial tension and political unrest, Dr. Douglas explains.

Dr. Douglas' arrival in British Guiana coincided with the beginning of a period of general unrest in the country because of coming elections; but after "six months of emotionally-charged waiting," which he used to formulate plans, progress in business education began to be made.

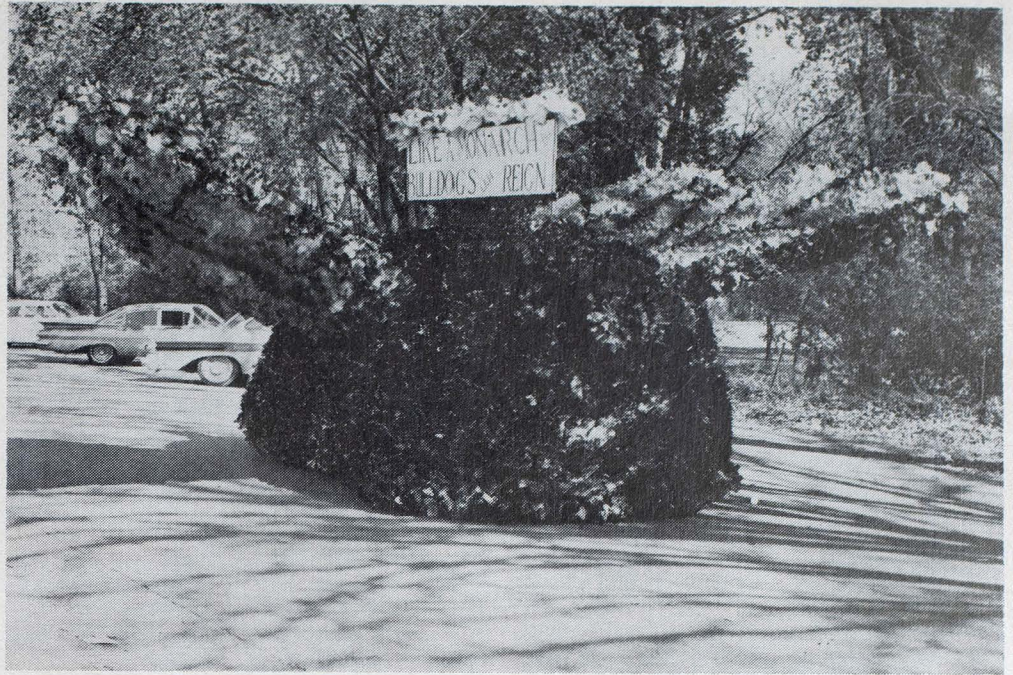

"The Guianese place great value on education," Dr. Douglas explains. "It is the one thing on which the country is united and in which there is general racial harmony. The old concept of education as a means of evading or avoiding work is giving way to a desire to improve and increase work output through education." The literacy rate in the country is very high—nearly 90%. Dr. Douglas pointed out that it is often misleading to try to compare the educational system of a developing country with its counterpart in the U.S., for the ancient and modern often exist side by side.

"In British Guiana," he explained, "school buildings may range from a shed to a very elaborate building, at least from outward appearance. But, if you were to examine the curriculum of any school in the country, you would be pleasantly surprised to find that it is almost exactly the same as the curriculum found in typical schools in the U.S. The greatest difficulties exist in the organization and administration."

Dr. Douglas' work was centered in the Float entered by the Industrial Arts Club which won first prize in the mechanical division and also the traveling trophy for the best all around float in the Homecoming parade October 24.

Government Technical Institute, the only government-operated technical school in the country; and his particular responsibility was to start courses in secretarial science at the institute. His first class there consisted of 25 students, ranging in age from 15 to 28. Three Guianese teachers assisted him in teaching the first four commercial courses set up there—typewriting, shorthand, business English, and filing.

English is the official language in British Guiana, and all instruction is given in it. "In my opinion," he said, "the native creolese dialect... is about the same problem to a U.S. visitor that the Brooklyn dialect or the Louisiana creole dialect would be to a Midwesterner in the U.S. In the classrooms, or from the lecture platform, I had no great difficulty in making myself understood."

Although his particular assignment was to start commercial courses, Dr. Douglas recommended a program of teacher education as well. As a result, eight students were trained as teachers by pursuing the subjects of educational psychology, methods of teaching, principles of business education, and practice teaching. In 1962-1963 a second class of nine students was started. Dr. Douglas taught these supervising or teaching the regular commercial courses early in the first year; but as time went on, more and more of the responsibility was placed on teacher trainees.

When his first year courses closed, only two students had dropped out of the classes; and a total of 283 applications had been received for the 25 class openings to be filled the next year. Dr. Douglas used a mental maturity and clerical aptitude test to narrow down the group. In his second year in British Guiana (1962-1963), despite a nearly bankrupt country, racial strife, and widespread unemployment, Dr. Douglas added a second-year commercial curriculum; office machines were installed and their use taught; and all courses progressed. Due to a nation-wide strike, all schools closed with the Easter vacation and were still closed when Dr. Douglas departed the country on May 14, 1963.

While in British Guiana, Dr. Douglas and his wife were active in civic and social affairs. He gave 15 or more major public addresses, and she gave lectures and demonstrations on audio-visual aids in various schools and at the YWCA. Together they wrote a series of Sunday School lessons covering a year-long period for the Caribbean area. "As a family we have many friends in British Guiana," said Dr. Douglas. "We left them with reluctance when our tour of duty was over and we returned to the United States."
